Carruthers started for the Quakers but was relieved by Vincent in the fourth Carruthers pitched a nice game, but on account of the game being forfeited, he was yanked, so he would be in good trim for the next battle. Vincent pitched a very nice game holding the losers to six hits A home run by Jimmy Graham for the Lock makers in the last inning was the feature clout of the game. Jimmy McMartin called them from behind the plate and Gord Webb on the bases.

At 8 o'clock the Triple Link and Knights were to clash but neither team showed up and at 9 o'clock neither the Kiwanis or the Belmonts made an appearance at the rink.

ABOUT PERSIAN RUGS.

We Put Rugs on the Floor— Orient on the Wall.

We think that rugs should be laid on the floor. The makers don't.

To the Western mind this is quite wrong. But are we right in our way of thinking?

Let us first cousider what rugs mean to the makers. They are really pictures worked by hand in yarn. They started by being tribal pictures designed in the dim ages by individuals blessed with the artistic sense.

Their pigments were vegetable extracts which, for fastness of color, cannot be beaten by the chemical productions of to-day. For a brush they used the shuttle, and the colored yarns took the place of the paints. The loom was their palette. So, being pictures, their proper place is the wall, not the ground.

Each tribe has its distinctive design. Kerman rugs, with their delicate shades of turquoise blue, rose pink, and buff in floral designs, are the pictures of trees and flowering shrubs. The Shiraz and Tabriz rugs represent the animal world in their quaint miniatures of cubistic animals and birds. The Bokhara and Bhaktiari rugs are plainer, more geometrical in design, with a broad border in buff and Turkey red, which gives a rich, warm effect. Prayer rugs are similarly woven, except that the space on which the pious Mosiem prostrates himself at the hour of prayer, when the faithful face Meccawards, is outlined in white or buff. The places for the hands are marked close to where the head has to touch.

Quaint? Not really. In all Oriental schools lessons are chanted, not sung. There is nothing peculiar about this. If we visit the kindergarten class of a village school in this country we will find the tiny tots intoning "Twice one are two."

So when instructing their workmen the early Persian carpet artists intoned their instructions, and made each workman repeat the portion which referred to his particular piece of work. To avoid confusion different keys were intoned to differentiate the various designs. Thus a glee was composed. By constant repetition it formed a song with each stave containing a definite object. It is easier to commit a piece to memory by singing, and so the song design was handed down, and now it takes the place of a pattern book. Typical of topsy-turveydom. True.

A fascinating feature of Persian rugs is the irregularity of the design. "Only Allah is perfect," says the Holy Koran, so being pious Mahommedans, the weavers purposely make defective designs.

This accounts for the grotesqueness of the figures. The number of figures in each row is never the same throughout. The borders differ in width, and some portions of each are woven in a lighter or darker shade to break the sameness.

ARE YOU SUPERSTITIOUS ?

Many People Believe No. 13 as Unlucky and Lucky.

By C. P.

Very few of us will admit we are superstitious. Of course, we really do like a dark man to be the "first foot" in the house on New Year's Day, but you quite understand that it pleases Aunt Mary or—well, somebody, that's why.

Mind going under a ladder? Who could possibly be so foolish? We stroll jauntily along under it, and it's nobody's business if our fingers happen to be crossed to avert the Evil One, is it?

No one really cares about spilling salt or crossing two knives. Oh, dear, no! But if you're likely to feel troubled about it, they'll just do whatever is necessary as an antidote.

Those mascots everybody is wearing nowadays either on their persons or cars—just fun, you know. It is quite by chance that they spend hectic hours searching for the very thing they believe in—er—at least, what will look effective.

Poor number thirteen has been given a bad name that will stick to it for life, but only one person out of ten will admit of fearing that number. But out of sheer mischief invite those valiant nine to join you at dinner to make up thirteen, and note how many have previous engagements. It is doubtful whether even the scoffers will genuinely thank you for desiring their company. It is viewed with uneasiness.

Yet thirteen has proved to many the luckiest number imaginable.

One wonders whether all the brides who have so faithfully carried out the old superstition that bids them wear "something old, something new, something borrowed, and something blue," have been lucky?

It really is tiresome to see the new moon for the first time through glass. Not because you believe it's unlucky. Perish the thought! But because someone or other will be certain to attribute any bad luck that happens to come on you to that. Therefore you will just step outside and look at it—and wish!

Most countrymen are superstitious about the moon, but results usually show that they are right, it must be admitted.

They sow their seeds five or six days before the new moon is due, with the comforting certainty that they will grow with the moon. Sowing them when the moon is approaching fulness is just so much wasted time, they will tell you.

And a great many herring fishermen believe in the new moon for heavy catches. When one sees the nets come in there certainty seems to be something more than mere superstition in this.

Could you break a mirror without a qualm? Seven years of bad luck is a long period, remember, strong-minded ones. I have always treated every mirror I have met with the greatest respect and gentleness, in case—. Then one day, going where I wasn't looking, I collided with my very best antique mirroe and broke it.

Seven years seemed to loom menacingly ahead, despite my scoffing laughter.

That was two or more years ago, since when the very nicest things keep happening to me. Some day I shall break another one "by accident on purpose," I think.

So much for that superstition, and no doubt all the others can be tested with equal results.

Nevertheless, if it gives us satisfaction to wear our "lucky" colors and mascots, let us go on though the world may know it not. The feeling that we are lucky inspires confidence.

RECORD CATTLE EXPORT.

MONTREAL, Nov. 29.—(Canadian Press).—A record was established this season in the number of head of cattle shipped from this port, the total amounting to 42,555 head, as compaded with 29,766 head last year. The local cattle export season came to a close at noon Friday with the departure of the steamship Kastalia for Glasgow.

BURIED

Ruins of an ancient city, that housed 20,000 Indians 3000 or more years ago, are dug up in southeastern Nevada. Stone street pavements with curbstones come to view but the inhabitants used arrowheads, crude pottery, and were otherwise primitve. The marvel of this archaeological discover is the size of the town. It may mean that our continent at one time had a fairly dense population. When Columbus later discovered America, experts estimate, Indians from the Rio Grande to the north pole totaled not over 350,000.

THEATRES

AT THE ROYAL.

HOOT GIBSON, WITH STRONG NEW VEHICLE.

Two theatrical productions, or parts of them at least, of the speaking stage variety, are incorporated in the Universal-Gibson production "40 Horse Hawkins," to be given its first local showing at the Royal Theatre next Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The screen play was written by Edward Sedgwick, who has directed all of Gibson's recent pictures, in collaboration with Raymond L. Schrock, of Universal's scenario department. Those who already have seen it, are united in pronouncing it the strongest vehicle in which Gibson has appeared.

The so-called legitimate stage plays in question are an old time melodrama, and a Broadway production of Civil War days. The first was acted on an especially constructed small town stage, and the other in the big theatre at Universal City.

In the former case, Gibson is shown as stage manager and everything else, busily employed. Anne Cornwall, Helen Holmes and Richard Tucker are the screen people who take the parts in the melodrama.

In the Broadway show, Gibson who has come to New York in search of the ingenue of the first company, is one of the soldiers. While blundering around about he seen Christie's short farces and comedies in the past know what to expect, for in this full-length production, the Christie organization has followed the style which is pursued in is t two-reel films; that is, telling a logical little story and brightening it up with funny situations.

"HOLD YOUR BREATH" HAS ALL STAR COMEDY CAST. THRILLS AND FUN IN STORY.

Fiance is Too Fat to Rescue Heroine From High Building.

Thrilling action spaced with packs of laughs — that's "Hold Your Breath" the first of the Al Christie feature productions, which comes to the Royal Theatre for a three days run next Monday. Those who have seen Christie's short farces and comedies in the past know what to expect, for in this full-length production, the Christie organization has followed the style which is pursued in is t two-reel films; that is, telling a logical little story and brightening it up with funny situations.

"Hold Your Breath" has an all-star comedy cast headed by Dorothy Devore who is called upon to display her talents in many dangerous situation. While she dangles from hazardous heights and risks her fair neck in a hundred different ways, she manages to inject large quantities of humor into her role.

Playing opposite Miss Devore is jovial Walter Hiers, known to be as comical as he is corpulent. Walter plays the role of Dorothy's finance who, being too fat to climb and rescue her from her difficulties on a high building, calls in the fire department and assembles a load of hay, a ton of mattresses and other accessories to get her out of her predicaments.

Tully Marshall, who has been seen in countless serious roles in dramatic productions, plays a comedy characterization in "Hold Your Breath." Jimmie Harrison and Priscilla Bonner have other important roles. Jimmie Adams, Jay Belasco, Eddie Baker, Bud Fine, Lincoln Plumer, Patrica Gore, George Pierce and Douglas Carter, a contingent whose faces are very familiar in Christie comedies, brighten up the less serious parts of this production.

BENNY LEONARD IN "FLYING FISTS" AT ROYAL MONDAY.

The second of the series of prize ting stories starry Benny Leonard the lightweight world's champion will be on the programme at the Royal Monday. This series called "Flying Fists" are produced on an elaborate scale and compare favorably with the "Leather Pushers. Leonard has youth in his favor and is a surprisingly food actor. A real four round boxing bout is included in each episode.

ed, cause them to appear unappreciated, and laking ju stifiable enthusiasm. The critic of the N. Y. Times sums up the matter justly, and according to all accounts truly, when he said that the "Thief of Bagdad is a feat of moving picture art which has never been equalled or even approached." So also the Evening Telegram: "It is the greatest picture we have seen or ever expect to see."

The more important members of the cast are Julanne Johnston, formerly a member of the famous Morgan Dancers, who impersonates the Princess; So-Jin Kamayama, imported from Japan, where he has been the leading Shakespearean actor, who impersonates the Mongol Prince. Anna May Wong, a charming little Chinese flapper, is seen in the part of the slave. Snitz Edwards is the Thief's evil associate; Brandon Hurst is the Caliph.

"The Thief of Bagda:" will positively not be shown in any other theatre in the city this year.

AT THE CAPITOL.

James Cruze, who produced "The Covered Wagon," is responsible for the interesting picture that forms the feature at the Capitol Theatre for the last two days of this week, "The City that Never Sleeps," with a well-rounded cast that includes Ricardo Cortez, Kathlyn Williams, Louise Dresser and Virginia Lee Corbin. It is a picture of fashionable New York and the night-life of the Tenderloin district, with a heart interest theme that illustrates the tug of mother love in a reckless woman.

The final episode of the "Fight and Win" series shows Jack Dempsey in a whirlwind fight in "Kayo for Cupid," with the usual romantic and humorous elements introduced that have made this a very popular series.

New York — wonder city of the world—in the good "old days" before the war and before prohibition, with its notorious Bowery, East Side gangsters, cheap saloons and free lunch; and New York in 1924, with its jazz-mad Broadway, its gay White Way, its glittering night life and its fast set—against these two contrasting backgrounds "The City that Never Sleeps" unfolds its poignant story of mother-love and sacrifice.

The picture is an adaptation by Walter Woods and Anthony Coldewey of Leroy Scott's famous story, "Mother O'Day." The action centers about two women, mother and daughter. The mother keeps a cafe and dance hall in the Bowery section of New York. To make sure that her little baby girl will get the proper care and attention, she arranges to have the child adopted by an impoverished but socially prominine society woman to educate and bring up as her very own.

The girl grows up in an age when to have is to spend and the female of the species tries to outdo the male in merry-making. How the mother saves her daughter from her companions and herself provides real gripping drama. From start to finish, the screen play is chuck full of all those elements that go to make rich entertainment.

Rudolph Valentino's first week in a motion picture studio since 1922 was a strenuous one. Out at the Paramount Long Island studio, where he made 'Monsieur Beaucaire' under the direction of Sidney Olcott, the popular star was besieged by friends who wanted to wish him well and to witness the launching of the picture, which brings Valentino back under the Paramount banner.

The week opened with the star giving a luncheon party for the members of the cast and staff which was to produce "Beaucaire." It was a fellowship luncheon, and Mr. Valentino, in informal talk, drove home the fact that it was not a Valentino picture they were about to make, but "Monsieur Beaucaire" and that everyone in the cast was just as important as he.

On the following day, the official opening of the picture, forty newspaper men and magazine writers were guests at a luncheon at the studio, given as a welcome to the star. In spite of all visitors Director Olcott succeeded in working every day and scene after scene were completed in rapid succession until now the picture, the greatest thing Valentino has ever attempted, is ready for the picture public and opens a three-day run next Monday at the Capitol Theatre.

The story is an adaptation of Booth Tarkington's novel of the same name and was adapted to the screen by Forrest Halsey. Bebe Daniels, Lois Wilson, Doris Kenyon, and Lowell Sherman are featured in the principal roles in support of the star. There's a great caste, too, including such names as Florence O'Denishawn, the popular dancer; Paulette Duval, Flora Finch, Ian MacLaren and others.

"Beaucaire" is in every sense of the word an ideal vehicle for Valentino's return to the screen.

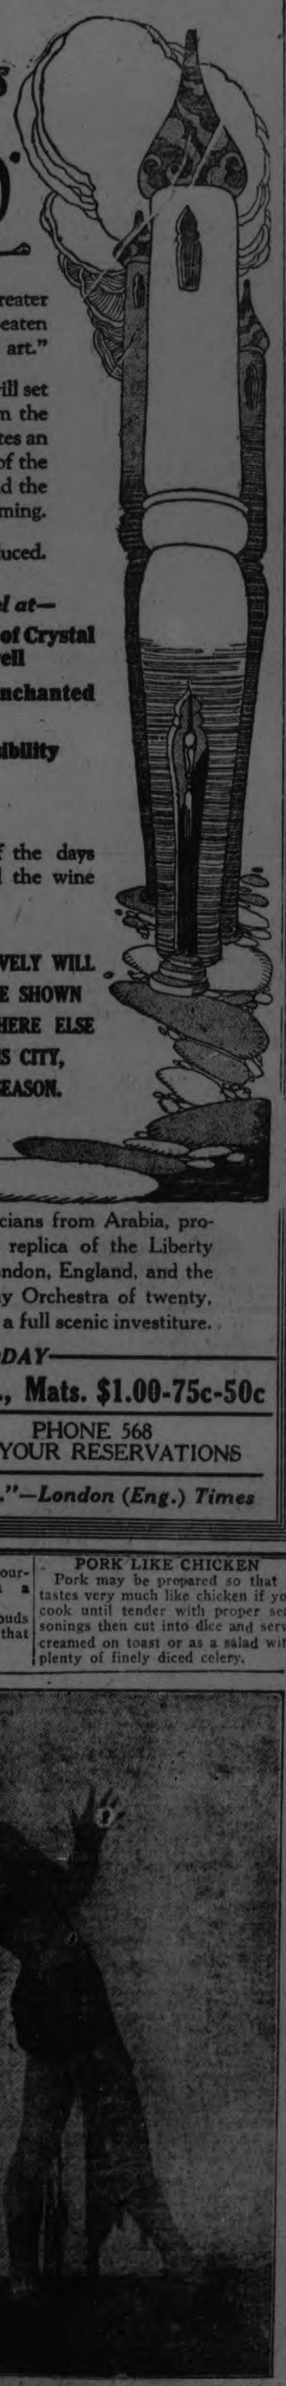
There Is Nothing to Compare with

Douglas Fairbanks in "The THIEF of BAGDAD"



This marvelous production is hailed, not merely as a greater picture, but as a production that steps so far out of the beaten path that critics speak of it as "the creation of a new art."

Douglas Fairbanks, as the daring and devilish thief, will set your pulses going, and as the romantic lover will warm the cockles of your heart. "The Thief of Bagdad" inaugurates an new era in film production. The utter magnificence of the backgrounds, the startling technique of its drama, and the almost incredible camera effects are truly overwhelming.

You will marvel at—
The Magic Carpet that sails across the house-tops
The Winged Horse that flies through the clouds
The Living Dragon in the Valley of Monsters

GEORGE STREET CHRISTMAS FAIR

Record Attendance In Christmas Atmosphere—Booths Well Patronized.

The big Christmas Fair held under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of George Street Methodist Church on Thursday and Friday of this week, in the school room of their church, closed last evening with a record of good attendance during both days. The Christmas keynote was carried out in the decorations of the big rooms and the several booths, which were very artistically arranged. Mrs. H. F. Foote acted as general convenor assisted by Miss Mary Elliott. The president of the society is Mrs. B. Shortly.

A pretty setting for the white-wear counter was contrived by triple arches festooned with artificial paper flowers and banked with hemlock branches. Mrs. Percy Hetherington and Mrs. Hill had charge of this sale, and Miss S. Miller had the handkerchief booth, done with pink and blue streamers.

Mrs. C. E. Smith and Mrs. F. Brownscombe sold aprons in a very effective orange booth, decorated with huge butterflies in orange and blue, with gilded clothes-pin bodies, an arch of orange streamers and a huge basket of orange mums.

Mrs. George Robertson had charge of the linen counter, a pink and white section with rose shaded lamps; Mrs. C. E. Staples sold cut flowers and ferns and Mrs. G. L. Stevens had charge of a very pretty candy section, a little rose and white arbor with lattice- work sections, a gilded Japanese screen and a huge overhead Japanese unabrella with cherry blossom fringe.

Mrs. H. M. Yelland was convenor of the doll booth, a pretty section of mauve and white and yellow squares and Mrs. J. Stubbs had charge of the sale of home-made cooking, in a booth decorated with pink and white paper streamers and large paper wheels.

Mrs. S. R. Armstrong was convenor of the tables in the rooms where high tea was served, decorated with crimped green and yellow streamers and yellow candles. Mrs. Harold Young had charge of the pretty little central tea-room, with dainty waitresses in the black and white which wound the pillars and pendant orange streamers on the lights.

LIKE THE REAL THING.

Toy Railroad System a Marvel of Completeness.

The east display window of White's Cycles and Sports, Ltd., 212 Charlotte street, is proving an arresting attraction these pre-Christmas days, to little folks, especially the boys. For there they experience a real thrill at the sight of a substantial toy railway system in active operation. The motive power is electricity and the train is full of life and pep and action. The only difference between this toy railroad and the real article is the size. All the devices of a modern railway are there—model locomotive and cars, rails, switches, signal tower, tunnels and so forth.

Most boys would highly appreciate a train and its traveling equipment for a Christmas gift, and whoever gets such a practical railroad device, as exhibited by White's Cycles and Sports Ltd., will have something of permanent and lasting interest.

It is really worth while seeing this toy railroad demonstrated, for it is simply wonderful in its completeness. Both show windows are full of Christmas suggestions, unique, practical and tempting, and their attraction is irresistible to passers by. 1d128 4530

STORM STILL RAGING.

Number of Fishing Boats From Brittany Ports Are Still Missing.

PARIS, November 29. Canadian Press. — Thursday's gale shows signs of reviving with added force, after its brief lull. The sea is running high, both in the English channel and on the Atlantic, doing considerable damage to ports, and the gale shows a tendency to extend inland, and to the Mediterranean Sea. The wires are down in some places, making communication difficult in various parts of the country.

A number of fishing boats are still missing from ports in north and south Brittany and scant hope is entertained for the survival of their crews.

BRITISH BATTALIONS TO EGYPT; ALLENBY REPORTS QUIET IN CAIRO

MURDER ENQUIRY RESULTS SLOW

LONDON, Dec. 1.—Despatches to the foreign office Sunday from Viscount Allenby, British high commissioner in Egypt, describe the situation there as being "in good order." Official despatches from the Sudan likewise report conditions "easier and satisfactory."

Nothing, however, yet indicates the real origin of the Khartum mutiny, which took several hours to suppress. By that time the building in which the mutineers took refuge was in ruins from gunfire, and the mutineers separated into small parties. Some of them escaped to the surrounding towns, while others were arrested by the soldiers.

The government is still of the opinion that it will not be necessary to employ force, but the steady reinforcement of British troops in Egypt continues. The first battalion of Buffs embarked from Gibraltar for Egypt yesterday. Cairo advices indicate that the new government is devoting itself to the preservation of peace, and that no reports of new incidents in the Sudan have reached Cairo.

OBJECT TO ARRESTS.

Chamber of Deputies Claims Parliamentary Immunity For Its Members.

CAIRO, Egypt, Dec. 1. — The fourth battalion of Egyptian infantry arrived here Sunday from Khartum and will be confined in the Abbassia Barracks for a week.

No further arrests took place Saturday. The 34 men who previously had been taken into custody were interrogated by the public prosecutor. A delegation of members of the chamber of deputies has protested to the prosecutor and the Liberal-Constitutional party has published a manifesto protesting against arrests of members of the chamber.

A communique issued Sunday states that the recent arrests of members of the chamber of deputies has raised the question of whether parliamentary immunity has been suspended during the present adjournment of the session. Judicial authorities are now investigating the question, it was said, and the public is requested to calmly await their decision. The communique says:

"The public, however, must also consider the grave and exceptional motives leaving the government to interpret the constitution in a manner which, though justified by legal reasons, appears at first sight to restrict parliamentary rights. The government is obliged to take account not only of the gravity of the accusations against the deputies concerned, but also of the necessity of safeguarding as far as is still possible, the independence of the nation by avoiding, as far as it is able, the giving of grounds for foreign authority to believe itself justified in infringing the liberties of citizens. Furthermore, it is for parliament to settle the question definitely, and when it does so, the detention of the deputies must end unless parliament has decided otherwise."

Two Officers Killed.

Another official communique, with refernce to the Khartunm mutiny, shows that two British officers, one British physician and two Syrian physicians were killed and nine other men of the ranks wounded.

A meeting was held at the ministry of interior Sunday, presided over by an under-secretary at which measures were discussed for preserving order the meeting also went exhaustively into the matter of the assassination of Sirdar Stack and the progress of the inquiry into the assassination.

A rumor was current that the British authorities had called the attention of the Egyptian government to the lack of results from the enquiry although eight days had elapsed since the Sirdar was shot.

Action Was Hasty.

The manifesto of the Liberal-Constitutional party says, among other things that the British government should have waited for the outcome of the enquiry into the murder of the Sirdar instead of hastening to display strength against a nation "whose sole fault is to claims its rights and to attack a nation's independence for the acts of a few criminals."

The manifesto regrets that the Egyptian government, instead of preventing the arrest of deputies, who it says enjoy parliamentary immunity, continues to take into custody still others. It protests against acts contrary to justice and calls on all sons of Egypt to unite to save the constitution and to meet the attack on the nation's independence. This, it declares, is the only way to face the present crisis.

The Sassia, Liberal-Constitutional party's organ, puts forth conciliatory ideas in an article in which it expresses the hope that Great Britain will realize in the interests of the British Empire in the Nile Valley, that the spirit of reconciliation ought to prevail. The article trusts that "the momentary influence, dictated by the anger of the hour" will pass in favor of a reciprocal spirit of understanding based on respect for the rights of Egypt and interests of Great Britain in the Nile Valley.

LONDON, Dec. 1. — The latest world record claimed here is the laying of 809 bricks in an hour, or more than thirteen a minute. The feat was performed by Christopher Hull, a foreman bricklayer of Sheffield, for a wager of £10.

Hull was allowed four laborers to wait upon him, but nevertheless the performance was regarded as remarkable. His achievement meets with no admiration among the trade unionists, however, and a union official is quoted as saying:

"The man's crazy and ought to be made to eat his bricks. A fair average is forty an hour."

KORETZ GIVES UP LARGE SUM

ARRESTED AT SEA

NEW YORK, December 1. — Leo Koretz, wanted in Chicago in connection with alleged stock swindles, totalling approximately $2,000,000 left here for Chicago on Sunday afternoon, in company with two assistant state attorneys of Illinois. The party arrived here from Halifax on the liner Caronia.

As the prisoner was being taken to the train Alphonse F. Spiegel, attorney and representative of the Chicago Title and Trust Company, announced that Koretz had surrendered about $100,000. During an interview with Spiegel he is said to have revealed the details of his financial operations in New York during the period following his disappearance from Chicago.

After preliminary formalities with the customs, immigration and public health authorities Koretz was taken to an hotel for luncheon.

Accompanying him were John A. Sbarbaro and Thomas Marshall, assistant states attorneys of Illinois; Adrian L. Hoover of the Chicago Textile and Trust Company; Joseph Connelly, his attorney, and R. H. Scriven, provincial constable, from Halifax, all of whom had boarded the ship with him at the Nova Scotia port.

The Illinois officials said that Koretz had boarded the ship voluntarily and that they had served a warrant on him as soon as the Caronia had entered United States waters.

Hurried to Hotel.

Spiegel boarded the vessel soon after it docked and had a long conversation with Koretz and his attorney but neither he nor Koretz would talk to the newspaper men, although the prisoner submitted to be photographed.

Spiegel, it was said, was desirous that Koretz go to the offices of the American Bar Association and submit to further questioning, but the Chicago officials did not approve of the plan and hurried Koretz to an up-town hotel.

Representatives of the Chicago bank are said to have questioned Koretz closely as to the disposition of the fund which they believe he may have secreted here after leaving Chicago. The prisoner was reported to have surrendered the bank books, safe deposit keys, and to have given information regarding his affairs in New York.

EXCAVATORS IN YUCATAN EXPECT TO REVEAL ORIGIN OF MASONRY

Believe They Can Prove That the First Masonic Lodge Was Organized on the Western Continent—Exploring Ruins of Famous Maya City.

By ALMA REED.

UXMAL, Yucatan, Dec. 1.—Will the proposed excavations in the ruins of Uxmal reveal the origin of Free Masonry?

The announcement of the project by the Mexican Government is reviving the hope that the birthplace of the great fraternity will be discovered in Yucatan's famous Maya City.

The controversy among historians as to how and where the Masonic Order first came into existence has given rise to many theories. The list of supposed founders begins with Adam, and includes the Philosopher Pythagoras, King Solomon, the Romans, the early Christians, the Druids, and the Knight Templars of the Crusades.

Those who believe with the French savant, Dr. Auguste Le Plongeon, that Masonry was developed on the American continent, thousands of years ago, link its symbols and rites with the religious mysteries of ancient Egypt, Chaldea, Greece, Etruria and India.

Mighty Civilization.

They regard the Maya Empire as the course of a mighty civilization which extended its influence to all parts of the earth. The traditions, customs, and religious beliefs recorded in the sacred books of the various nations, and accepted as the primitive history of mankind, are traced to the people who once inhabited the Yucatan peninsula.

Uxmal, or the "city thrice destroyed," was the centre of the Maya government and religion. Le Plongeon held that its white-robed priests invented the tokens, pass words, decorations of the lodges, and the secret symbolism of the initiation ceremonies to the Masonic degrees.

It is possible that the excavations of Mexico's Department of Anthropology will prove Uxmal's enormous truncated mound, known as the "House of the Seer," to be the world's original Masonic Temple. The mystic numbers three, five and seven, dominate the building plan. Several other emblems of Masonry, including the skull and crossbones, are sculptured on the walls and cornices.

Third Degree Rites.

The middle chamber faces west, and measures seven metres in length. Rectangular in shape, it outlines the Maya and the Egyptian word for "Universe." Certain archaeologists regard it as the sanctum in which the rites of the Masonic Third Degree were first administered.

At the base of this edifice, Le Plongeon claimed to have found the broken statue of a priest, who wore an apron with an extended hand.

In the Popul-Vuh, the sacred book of the Quiches, a branch of the Maya race in Guatemala, there is a description of an initiation to the sacred mysteries of Xibalba.

These mysteries are said to represent the earliest form of Free Masonry, but, if so, the tests given to the first Masons consisted of rare feats and terrible ordeals. To reach the place of initiatian, the candidate crossed two rivers, one of mud and the other of blood, both filled with great dangers. At one of the trials, he was asked to produce beautiful flowers while isolated in a guarded room, at the same fime defending himself against the thrusts of dexterous spearmen. At another, he had to avoid freezing to death during a night spent in a chamber of intense cold. To come out unscorched from a burning furnace, and unhurt, from a den of ferocious tigers, were other typical tests, according to the legend.

The crumbling cities in the depths of Central American forests, jealously guard strange secrets! Is Masonry's most baffling secret—the secret of its origin — numbered among them?

WRECKAGE CAST UP

CUTTYHUNK, Mass., Dec. 1.—(Canadian Press).—Wreckage, evidence of possible tragedy which overtook some vessel in the storm which swept the New England coast early Saturday was washed ashore near the Cuttyhunk coastguard station Sunday morning. The wreckage, consisting chiefly of portions of a pilot house and deck house, might have come from a boat which was the victim of a collision rather than of the storm.

A chart box bearing the lettering, "S.S. Camden," a portion of the pilot house in which was a discolored log book carrying as its last entry "under way" at 5.30 a.m., November 30, and medical stores from the United States submarine base at New London, Conn., were among the wreckage which the coastguardsmen found strewn on the beach.

WIFE STICKS BY PONZI, RAISES BAIL FOR HIM

Puts Up $1,000 Liberty Bond and Will Go Along if 'Wizard' is Deported.

BOSTON, December 1. — The unhappy wife of Charles Ponzi, the so-called "Financial vizard," and get-rich-quick scheme promoter, declared on Saturday that if her husband should be deported to Italy or Canada, she would go with him. Ponzi was arrested and charged with being in the country illegally on a warrant from the Department of Labor at Washington.

The loyal wife raised the $1000 bond in which Ponzi was held by producing a Liberty bond of that denomination.

The dapper little Italian was loud in his protests against his arrest. He was taken to the immigration "pen" at East Boston, his wife following.

The move to deport Ponzi is the result of several months of investigation by immigration officers. Ponzi entered the United States from Canada in 1912.

FURNACE MYSTERY BAFFLES PROBERS

Circumstances of Case Present Most Unusual Test to Investigators.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Dec. 1.—John R. King, county prosecutor, after a conference with his aides who have been endeavoring to solve the Sheatsley furnace mystery, Saturday issued a statement, in which he said his investigation awaited tests now being made by scientific experts.

"We have up to date run down every clue; our investigation has been as thorough and complete as possible; we will now stop and await the finding of the experts and upon the submission of the finding and conclusions, and after an analysis has been made of the same, we will be able to give to the public what conclusions have been arrived at," he said.

Circumstances surrounding the finding of the body of Mrs. Addie Sheatsley, fifty-year-old wife of the pastor of Christ Evangelical Lutheran Church, in the furnace of the parsonage on November 17, Mr. King said, present the most baffling case he has ever attempted to solve.

ANDREW PEPPALL FREE.

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Dec. 1.—Andrew H. Peppall, an alleged figure in a Canadian bond scandal, was cleared Saturday of immigration charges brought against him here last summer, defeating extradition efforts on the part of Canadian authorities. An order was received from Washington dismissing the original warrant of arrest, which charged Peppall with illegally entering the United States.

PASTOR OBEYED LAW OF CHURCH AND LOST LOVE

Renounced Engagement With Divorcee in Submission to Episcopal Marriage Rule.

HEALTH BROKEN

...NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—The Rev. Dr. Percy Stickney Grant left New York hospital Saturday as quietly and as unexpectedly as he entered the institution a week ago, and laughing and joking at his home in Bedfod Village, he announced he was going to work.

Slightly thinner and minus a bit of his old vigor, but otherwise the same as when he preached from the pulpit of his former charge, the Episcopal Church of the Ascension, Dr. Grant said he would leave to their own punishment the persons who originated sensational stories about his illness.

"I am going to turn my hand to whatever will bring in money," he said in laughingly disclaiming that he intended to concentrate solely on literary work. "I am badly in need of money, I am going to get into something, but just what it will be I can't say for the moment.

"I'll probably have to fight hard to make enough money, but I shall fight with my spirit—whatever my body may be, my spirit is not sick."

Spent His Money.

The former fighting rector of Ascension Church turned back to that time when he was engaged to Mrs. Rita de Asocta Stakes Lydig and was determined to marry her despite the ban placed by Bishop William T. Manning on the ceremony in the Episcopal Church. He continued:

"For several years Mrs. Lydig, commanding me to consider her fortune as my own, had persisted in an offer to have my modest little country place in Bedford Village transformed into a mansion modeled after a French chateau.

"She eagerly consulted with me over architectural plans which she had drafted and which estimated the probable cost of alterations at $32,000.

"Vainly I tried to dissuade her. I pleaded that my peculiar position forbade acceptance of such favors. We seemed then to be in our empasse about our contemplated marriage.

Was Twice Divorced.

"Twice divorced," Mrs. Lydig, as you know, was refused the marriage

THE WEATHER.

December has come in with the ground covered with several inches of snow, and with the thermometer down to within 4 degrees of the zero mark. There is little cause, however, for complaining, as we have had a beautiful fall season. November's highest temperature was 67 degrees; the lowest 5 degrees. The precipitation was .87. Since the first of October there has been less than 1½ inches. This is only about 25 per cent. of what we usually get, and this shortage will likely be felt later on. Last year we had snow on Nov. 26th and 27th to the depth of 4½ inches. This disappeared, and no more came until Dec. 27th and following days. By the last day of the year we had good sleighing. The first zero came on January 2nd, with 2 below.—W. P.

GLASGOW, Dec. 1. — (Canadian Press).—At the Clydebank yards of John Brown and Co., and in the presence of a large and representative gathering of Canadians and Europeans, the "Princess Marguerite," the latest steamship to be built for the Canadian Pacific Railway, was to-day successfully launched. The Christening ceremony was performed by the Hon. Marguerite Shaughnessy, who came from Canada especially for this purpose, and after whom the new ship has been named. As Miss Shaughnessy cut the ribbon and released the bottle of champagne which broke on the bow of the new ship, she also pressed the button which released the mechanism and the "Princess Marguerite" glided down and came to rest in the record time of thirty-six seconds, completing one of the most perfect launches ever seen on the Clyde. The day had opened with a gale of wind and a downpour of rain, but cleared, and the ceremony took place in brilliant sunshine.

At a lunch in the John Brown Company office, following the launching, a message from E. W. Beatty, chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific, was read, in which he said: "It is most fitting that this ship should be named after the youngest daughter of the late president and chairman, who was the chief executive officer of the company for nineteen years, and who by his outstanding ability and great zeal in the company's interest, was largely responsible for its great progress during that period. I hope that the launching will be entirely successful and that the ship will prove worthy of both her builders and her sponsor."

BILIOUS and SICK HEADCHES ARE CAUSED BY CONSTIPATION

Once you allow your bowels to become constipated you will become troubled with bilious and sick headaches, and for relief you must help your liver to remove the poisonous bile that is circulating in the blood and upsetting the entire biliary system. For this purpose there is no other remedy to equal

MILBURN'S LAXA-LIVER PILLS

Mrs. L. G. Nethercott, R.R. No. 1, Crinan, Ont., writes:—"I was awfully troubled with constipation, and sick and bilious headaches accompanied with severe vomiting spells which made me very miserable. I tried different remedies, without relief, but since taking Laxa-Liver Pills the headaches and constipation have disappeared, and I am very thankful for what they have done for me."

GOOD COMPANY

Like a maze of color, such as she, or a rainbow in the sky; and she made me think of a sun-kissed day as she calmly sauntered by. Her hat, her gown, well, everything, it seemed, was just that quaint to make you think of the harmony that a painter'd like to paint.

And who am I that I judge this miss? Well, she looked in my direction, and her smile that day, as she glanced my way, was the last word in perfection. How often I have seen that girl, the vision quickly told me, and I walked right up and spoke to her 'cause I knew she wouldn't scold me.

Then we sauntered up the avenue to a small but good cafe, where we passed perhaps an hour or two (and a five-buck bill away). And then she talked of a movie show, and, of course, that's where we went. And, my, oh, my, how the time does fly, for another hour was spent.

When the film was o'er and there was no more, and we had no place to roam; well, we took a car and we traveled far till we finally landed home. 'Twas a night well spent for a girl and gent, and I'm ready for another; 'cause I oft partake and for her dear sake, the girl I take's my mother.

MENUS FOR A FAMILY

Children under school age may have the vegetables from the casserole of lamb, some of the finely minced tender leaves of the endive and some of the raisins from the pie for their dinner. A little of the lamb may be given to them but is not necessary as their hearty meal was provided at noon time.

Children of four or five years who do not eat heartily should be given a glass of orange juice or an apple with one or two pieces of crisp toast during the morning and again during the afternoon. The fruit acts as a stimulant to the appetite as well as furnishing the very important vitamins.

Very often children of school age need an afternoon lunch. Especially if the dinner hour is late. Fruit with a sandwich or a small glass of milk with a sandwich is an ideal sort of "tea" for them.

Fish Chowder.

Two pounds cod or haddock, 2 cups potatoes cut in inch cubes, 1 medium sized onion, 2 slices salt pork cut ½ inch thick, 2 cups milk, ⅜ teaspoon pepper, 1 cup finely diced carrots.

The fish should be skinned. If bones are not removed, pull from flesh, cover with cold water and simmer twenty minutes. Strain and use in place of plain water to cook the fish. Cut fish in small pieces. Try fat from salt pork, skim out meat and add onion cut in thin slices. Cook over a slow fire until the onions are a pale straw color. Add fish and 2 cups boiling water or fish stock and simmer fifteen minutes. Add potatoes and carrots and cook twenty minutes or until tender. Season with pepper and salt if necessary. Add milk and bring to the boiling point but do not let boil. Moisten soda crackers in cold milk and put in a soup tureen. Pour over chowder and serve. Add boiling water as necessary during the cooking of the fish and vegetables, keeping enough water to cover them but no more.

Tapioca Indian Pudding.

Four tablespoons minute tapioca, 5 cups milk, 2-3 cup molasses, 4 tablespoons sugar, 4 tablespoons cornmeal, 2 tablespoons butter, 1 teaspoon salt.

Cover tapioca with milk and let stand ten minutes. Scald C cups of milk and slowly pour over cornmeal, stirring constantly. Cook ten minutes in double boiler. Add molasses, sugar, butter and salt and tapioca. Turn into a well buttered baking dish and pour over remaining cold milk. Bake 1½ hours in a moderate oven. Do not stir the cold milk into the pudding. Serve with cream.

VIKING

Ancient graves are found in eastern Washington and northern Idaho. Opsjon, Norwegian scientist of Seattle, thinks these graves, to be opened in the spring will prove that Norsemen visited our northwest in the year 1010 or 482 years ahead of Columbus' discovery of America.

Opsjon is a brave man. The Babbitts of some of our patriotic societies would want him arrested if he proved his case.

PICTURES SENT BY RADIO FROM LONDON

Sixteen Photographs Received in New York in Eight Hours Time.

LONDON, Dec. 1. — (Canadian Press).—What is claimed to have been the first demonstration in sending photographs by wireless from England to the United States was given at a radio house yesterday afternoon. The new system developed by R. H. Ranger, of the engineering department of the Radio Corporation of America, was used. There was not a receiving demonstration because the new receiving apparatus has not yet reached here.

Sixteen photographs were transmitted in eight hours. The demonstration, which was made at half possible speed of the apparatus to ensure perfect results, was begun late Saturday night and continued yesterday afternoon under the direction of G. S. Whitmore, chief of the Marconi Communication Bureau, and R. G. Ward, engineer of the Radio Corporation.

The photographs broadcast were of Frank B. Kellogg, United States Ambassador; the Prince of Wales, Premier Baldwin, Austen Chamberlain, British Foreign Secretary; Queen Mary, Dowager Queen Alexandra, and the late news pictures taken in London.

Yesterday afternoon a wireless message was received from New York, saying the pictures were coming beautifully, and that the next thing which would be accomplished by radio would be the sending of movie pictures.

Reckless Driving Is A Menace, Says Rockefeller

NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—(United Press).—Wealth in the hands of the unscrupulous is a curse while in the hands of philanthropists it is a blessing.

"Materialism has caused the destruction of all ptst civilizations, so go closer to God."

"An automobile driven by a reckless citizen is a menace but an automobile driven by a careful citizen is a beneficience."

This is the philosophy of John inRockefeller Jr., expressed in an address yesterday to his bible class at the Park Avenue Baptist Church.

Besides being one of the richest men in the world, Rockefeller is the father of Abbey Rockefeller who has twice been arrested for speeding.

THE GUMPS—THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE

SETTLERS OF WESTERN CANADA DESCRIBED BY PROF. SISSONS

Interesting Lecture on Canadian Immigration Results —Marmora's Series.

POLICY ADVISED.

Quality Better Than Quantity in Selecting New Citizens.

MARMORA, December 1. — Another excellent lecture under the auspices of the University Extension Club of Marmora, was given at the Town Hall on Friday evening by Professor C. B. Sissons of Toronto University.

The subject treated was "Some Peculiar Peoples in the Canadian West."

Rev. D. R. Clare presided, and before introducing the lecturer, bore evidence to each lecture of the course as having proved an intellectual feast. He mentioned that questions arising out of the lecture might be be put at its close.

Commencing his topic, Prof. Sissons said that his observations were made on a summer trip some years ago when he sought to arrive at conclusions concerning a wise emigration policy for this country. He had been in possession of some lantern slides dealing with his subject but these had disappeared somewhat mysteriously, so he would ask his hearers to try to hear through the mind and imagination, since on the present occasion they could not through the eye.

Professor Sissons went on to state that outside of the natives the first newcomers to the west were the French. The first school in the west was instituted a hundred years ago on the Red River by a French bishop. The Scotch Selkirk settlement on that same river came next. In southern Manitoba to-day there is a considerable section populated by the French Canadian. In their parishes the school stands in the centre, while the church everywhere is prominent. He would not describe the French as a peculiar people for they are very much like ourselves.

The next to settle in the west he would not describe as being particularly peculiar. These were the Icelanders, a people fond of education. Iceland was chiefly known on account of its geysers and icebergs but there is no place where literature and pure learning are more sought than in Iceland. More books are published in Iceland, proportionately than in any other part of Europe.

Chose Manitoba.

Professor Sissons told how two ambassadors came out from Iceland to Earl Aberdeen when he was our Governor-General, and were first taken to the County of Haliburton. This was too rocky for their taste, so they next tried Muskoka and Parry Sound. These places were also found unsuitable, so they finally settled about 50 years ago on the shores of Lake Winnipeg. They met with a terrible scourge of small-pox in the first year, and had many hardships to contend with. Still they hove prospered. They are devoted to culture and build community halls in addition to schools. So industrious are they that the women will knit as they walk. They keep a lot of black sheep so that they are not occasioned much dyeing of wool. The lecturer told of an Icelandic political meeting to which he was invited. These meetings partake of the nature of debates, whih are carried on with excellent good feeling.

It would be a good thing, the professor considered, if we returned to political debates. He also pointed out that one Icelander had become a Rhodes scholar. The Icelander likes his own language but will also learn the English language and strive to accommodate himself to the conditions he finds himself placed in.

The Mennonites.

Coming to the Mennonites, Professor Sissons said that these people were rather peculiar. They were a religious sect whose origin was to be found in the stormy days of the Reformation. They lived in Holland and afterwards moved to Prussia. With disbelief in military service, they were compelled to move to Southern Russia. Here they lived for a century, during which time not a dozen Russian words came into their language, so close was their style of living. Through running foul of the Russian authorities, they sought assistance of their brethren who had come over to Waterloo County. So as a result, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta quite number a will be found today The lecturer proceeded to describe a Mennonite village. In its centre is a school and teacher's residence but no church. Their lawns have no gress and are closely weeded. They have a profusion of flowers about their homes. The stable is attached to the house and the barn to the stable and behind the barn is the vegetable garden. The Mennonites have practically no faith in medical science so do not consult the doctor. No adornments are to be found in their homes. On the contrary they are very plain. Their floors are painted and sawdust is spread around, taking the place of sand as used by their brethren in the old land. They are scrupulously simple in manner of dress and living. They do not live under a communistic system but rather under a system whereby no man has better land than anyone else. They have met better than our own race, the isolation of prairie life. They run foul of the Government over their system of education. They are afraid of worldliness. The lecturer thought that in time they would make excellent citizens since they are of sturdy industrious and honest stock. He also referred to the square straw bricks which they use for fuel and their choice of sunflower seed as their main sweetmeat.

The Doukhobors.

The Doukhobors were the next cltss of people touched upon. References were made to their assassinated leader, Peter Verigin. The professor described them as a certain religious sect from Russia who holding that shedding of blood is wrong, will not fight or partake of animal food. They are not much given to education. They learn certain portions of Scripture by heart. They are found of songs. They learn to use their hands in the belief that training of character is effected by manual lbour. Professor Sissons next described their peculiar Turkish Baths of which they rake regular use once a week. Continuing, he said the Doukhobors were communists. They live in large houses accommodating six or seven families. Doukhobor Jam is the best manufactured in Canada. They have the best appliances for its manufacture. The women work in the fields barefooted. They have an arrangement whereby they work two weeks in the field and one week in the house. Their farming methods are a mixture of the old with the new. They are a wonderful people and capable of great things.

The Ruthenians.

The next people dealt with were the Ruthenians. They commenced to arrive about fifteen years before the war. Sometimes they were spoken of as Galicians. They are of splendid physique. Unless disturbed by agitators among themselves, they turn out well. They are mostly Greek Catholics. The Presbyterians have missions among them with a fair amount of success. Lastly, the lecturer touched on the Mormons. They are the most prosperous farmers in Alberta, being what are termed dry farmers. With no clergy, they elect from among themselves those who shall conduct their services. They are not communistic but they practice the tithe system. They are particularly keen on education. They are very intellectual and extremely musical. Everyone of their creed attends Sunday School. They practice narration. It would be a good thing if the schools of Ontario practised narration more. They no longer teach or practice polygamy. They are not so peculiar as some people would have us imagine. There are all sorts of peculiar people out in the West. We don't see our own peculiarities enough. We have invited the people from the highways and hedges of Europe that the plains of Canada be filled.

Concluding, Professor Sissons suggested three general ideas concerning the settlement of Canada:

1—Quality is better than quantity. Steamship and railway companies like to see a great influx of immigrants. They desire that their ships carry profitable ballast. It is important what kind of people we take into Canada. It is not good to turn over the proceeds of the toil of the pioneers to those without appreciation.

2—United of spirit is more important than uniformity.

There are those who say you must assimilate the foreigner. Forcible assimilation will not do any good. Better to have them different in type so long as they are united in spirit.

3—Citizenship is a sacred trust which should not be conferred lightly or taken away lightly.

Newcomers Neglected.

It is rather a blot on our history that we should invite these races here and make them citizens in the way we do. Newcomers should be enrolled into the citizenship body in a formal and impressive manner.

Our introduction of them to Canadian citizenship should be in a formal, proper and dignified way. Once given them, it should not be taken away for any slight cause. The best immigrants are those coming from the cradles of our own homes. Let us hope there will always be a worthy succession of these to swell with newcomers the ranks of those who should be loyal.

Dr. Thomson moved and Reeve G. B. Airhart seconded a hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer for so profitable a lecture. The National Anthem was lustily sung at the close.

Next week Professor Keys makes a return visit, lecturing this time on "Reading and Books for Boys and Girls."

DON'T FUSS WITH MUSTARD PLASTERS!

Musterole Works Without the Blister—Easier, Quicker

There's no sense in mixing a mess of mustard, flour and water when you can easily relieve pain, soreness or stiffness with a little clean, white Musterole.

Musterole is made of pure oil of mustard and other helpful ingredients, combined in the form of the present white ointment. It takes the place of mustard plasters, and will not blister.

Musterole usually gives prompt relief from sore throat, bronchitis, tonsilitis, croup, stiff neck, asthma, neuralgia, headache, congestion, pleurisy, rheumatism, lumbago, pains and aches of the back or joints, sprains, sore muscles, bruises, chilblains, frosted feet, colds of the chest (it may prevent pneumonia).

CAMPBELLFORD AND DISTRICT

Temperance Workers Meet and Elect Officers—Church Extends a Call.

CAMPBELLFORD, December 1.—Those interested in temperance from the Township of Seymour, met at the home of Rev. C. H. Daniel, Rear St., on Saturday night, at 8 o'clock. The meeting was called to finish the business of the O.T.A. campaign for the township.

It was decided on motion that a permanent temperance organization be formed for Seymour.

The following officers were elected: President, Rev. C. H. Daniel; Secretary, Fred Barnum; Treasurer, Harold Rutherford! eight Vice-Presidents, one for each sub-division; 1 Blythe Nelson, 2 George Longmuir, 3 Ernest Craighead, 4 Andrew Milne, 5 William Forde; 6 D. T. Petherick, 7 Joseph Bertrand, 8 George Von-Volkenburg.

The president, secretary treasurer, and the eight vice-presidents, will form the executive.

An information committee was formed of two from each ward. The object of this organization is to help Premier Ferguson and officials enforce the O.T.A.

Moved by B. Nelson and seconded by George Vonvolkenburg that resolutions be sent to Premier Ferguson, Attorney General Nickle and Major Belford, commending them on the stand they have taken in regard to the Ontario Temperance Act.

On motion the meeting adjourned to meet at the call of the chair.

Saturday afternoon and evening were busy hours at the Parish Hall. The article at the different booths of the bazaar were getting sold out. The ladies of the booths looked very nice in their paper caps and aprons, each of the ladies wearing the color that her booth was decorated in. This gave a gala appearance to the whole bazaar.

At half-past five the tables began to be filled for supper. A splendid supper was given and there was abundance of everything. A great number of the ladies of the church who were not doing duty upstairs were serving at the tables. The proceeds for the bazaar and supper will reach about seven hundred dollars. The ladies of Christ Church are to be congratulated on the success of the bazaar and supper.

The month of November, their seventieth anniversary month, has been a busy one for all of Christ Church, as all were endeavoring to clear off the debt on the Parish Hall. Special mention should be made of the "Tut's Tomb." Besides seeing Tut, a Prince, a "Hillyman" dressed in Eastern costume and two Princesses, Miss Campbell and Mrs. Burgar, also in costume, showed many different articles direct from Egypt. These were brought to Campbellford by Mrs. Kennedy and her daughter, Mrs. Burgar, after their trip abroad last summer, and Mrs. Burgar, one of the Princesses, showed these articles and explained what they were. There were two prayer rugs, two water jugs, which the women carry on their heads, two lamps, one small, the other larger with three lights, burning olive oil; pictures and fancy work done by the women, making it appear almost like a picture.

There was also a large round bronze tray, which the Egyptians use when they have special guests. Everyone who went to this mystery corner were much interested and pleased with what they saw.

In another part of the stage, a lady, Mrs. Runions, was kept busy telling fortunes. Some of the ladies, especially the younger ones, had great times listening to what was going to "happen."

The young folks of the church are preparing a play which will be given in a short time.

The Baptist Church, which has been without a pastor for three months has extended a call to Rev. E. D. Ford late of Wheatley. Mr. Ford has accepted the call and will commence his duties as pastor of the Baptist church the first Sunday in December which will be the 7th. Mr. Ford and family will be moving at once to Campbellford and will live in the Baptist Parsonage on Sebastapool street.

The collecting for the "Bible Society" will be done this week in Campbellford. The work is divided into Wards and on church has charge of a ward, as follows; Ward one—Anglican church; Ward two—Presbyterian church; Ward three—Baptist church and Ward four—Methodist church.

Mrs. Elizabeth Stillman who has been visiting her sister Mrs. Harry Noyes, of Peterboro, for the past two months, returned to her home on Rear street last Thursday.

Miss Myrtle Ford, Garry street, and Miss Harriet Lyttle, Booth street who have been in the West for several months returned on Friday to their homes in Campbellford They report a good time and enjoyed their trip very much.

Mr. and Mrs. McCartney and son Billy and Mr. and Mrs. Meagher of Peterboro motored to Campbellford and spent Sunday with friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Davis and Mr. and Mrs. Hepburn of Peterboro, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Moore of Sebastapool street.

LONDON MUSIC HALLS FORCED TO REMAIN DRY.

Lose Annual Fight in the County Council By Majority of Four Votes.

LONDON, Dec. 1, — Londoners and visitors who patronize seventeen music ralls in London, which are unlicensed to sell liquors, will still have to go home thirsty or obtain their liquid refreshments across the way during intermissions. The London County Council decided, by a vote of 47 to 43, not to grant permission for the sale and consumption of intoxicants to these halls.

This music hall liquor license question comes up annually for consideration, but the wets have been gradually gaining ground. In the Council vote their minority was only four votes against a minority of twelve last year. It is urged that the present situation is unfair, as many of the halls and cabarets are licensed to sell drinks, while these seventeen are not granted the same privilege. Temperance organizations redoubled their efforts this year to keep the halls dry when the license matter came up before the Council.

Are We "Bughouse" on Hotels?

It looks as if half of the country were deserting their homes to live in hotels. Last year a quarter of a billion dollars was spent on hotel construction in this country and those under way or contemplated for the present year will amount to double that sum. These are going up in the large cities and small and of those opened last year 64 represented a cost of more than a $1,000,000 each. Some of them cost $10,000,000. Five had more than 1,000 rooms each and 3 of them ranged from 4 to 1,200 rooms each.

THE DEATHBED WEDDING

Racing with death in an auto, a Boston girl arrived in Albany, N.Y., in time to marry her sweetheart four hours before he died from injuries received when he fell under a railroad train.

These deathbed marriages are not uncommon. In one case an English woman sailed for India and married her lover, whom she had not seen for three years, barely before the death-rattle sounded in his throat.

It is inspiring to know that, in our blase generation, there still are multitudes who believe love is eternal and not merely an episode this side of the grave.

Are lovers re-united in the Great Beyond? A belief to this effect is the supreme comfort for countless millions who have found "the right person."

In true love, men and women are closest to the spiritual.

Time does not lessen affection. Tears dim the eyes of the aged as they summon in memory the mate or sweetheart who passed on long ago.

The unhappily married must fervently hope that death will be an absolute divorce from their unfortunate choice. Many would vote for extinction in preference to eternal life if they thought they would be condemned forever to their earthly mates.

The reason for unhappy marriages has baffled philosophers in all centuries. Socrates believed that when a soul enters the world it is separated into two beings, a male and a female. These wander the earth, seeking reunion. If a man or woman weds the "wrong half," misery follows.

Many mystics believe that an unhappy marriage is an affliction visited on the unfortunate—a burden through this life, a problem. Apparently agreeing with the mystics are people who "make the best of a bad bargain." Surely, for them, death should be an eternal release.

GET ACQUAINTED WITH W.O.R.

(NEWARK, N. J.—405 METERS)

By WILLIAM J. FAGAN

WOR, Newark, operated by L. Bamberger & Co., is "very easy to listen to." It is one of the pioneer broadcasting stations in the East and its programs have always been of an exceptionally high quality. Its proximity to New York makes it one of the stations and it compares very favorably with some of the top-notchers to be found there.

WOR is the afternoon radio rendezvous of New York artists and actors. It can be said with entire truth that more noted actors and actresses have made their first radio appearance at WOR than through any other medium. WOR features its matinee programs with the stars of drama, musical comedy and the screen and there is scarcely a week that passes that some distinguished representatives of these fields of endeavor does not journey over to Newark for a radio engagement. Most of them are artists to whom the publicity which accrues from radio performances means but little. The musical part of the matinee program is usually of very high standard also.

Bedtime stories, sport reviews and dinner music occupy the on-the-air period between 6:15 and 7:30 nightly. These features are well taken care of. The only criticism is that WOR's dinner music is practically always of the jazz type. We don't know whether jazz is good for digestion or not. However, with that exception, the dinner hour is all that may be expected.

WOR broadcasts evening programs beginning at 8 p.m. on Monday, Wednesday and Saturday evenings, sharing this portion of time with WJY, New York. The concert programs are of an unusually high standard. Invariably, the classics occupy that portion of the program before 10 o'clock, when the popular entertainers are turned loose. Some very fine soloists have graced WOR's evening concert programs. Local choral organizations have had a prominent place from time to time and WOR's attempt at extensive remote control work, the Newark Band's summer concert season, was very creditable indeed.

WOR's announcing staff is capable and versatile, two of them in particular being singers of ability who have given recitals through WOR's microphone. The talks and lectures over WOR are among the best broadcast in the East and one of the most popular lecture courses ever offered over the radio, Dr. Sigmund Spaeth's "Common Sense of Music," was a feature of WOR every week for a long period.

There is little fault to be found with WOR. It serves a large territory and a large number of enthusiastic listeners. Its programs provide the proper range of entertainment to make them enjoyed by all classes. There is just enough popular music and just enough of the classic and semi-classic to provide the even balance sought (in most cases unsuccessfully) by many broadcasters who might well take a listening course at WOR.

The staff of instruction will be Principal F. C. McRae, B.S.A., Norwood, Ontario. Assistants, C. Frey, B.S.A., Norwood, Ontario, Miss Margaret Brown, Shedden, Ontario.

Will Enter Team.

Hastings hockey team is to be one of the four teams who are to make up the Trent Valley League this season. Messrs. Stanley Stevenson, W. Wellman, C. P. Doughty and Wm. Scriver were the representatives sent from here to the Trent Valley League meeting held in Marmora on Friday.

Mr. W. Wellman was elected second vice-president of the League for this year.

The first game the home team plays is on January 5, 1925, when the locals play the Marmora team. Plenty of first-class material is available in Hastings for the coming season's sport, and it is expected that some good games will be seen locally this season.

Fumes Exploded.

The ringing of the fire alarm caused a little excitement on Saturday evening. Mr. E. J. Lynch had taken an empty can which had previously held gasoline, and was going to pour some hot water into same, and the heat coming into contact with the gasoline fumes caused an explosion. The flames spread around Mr. Lynch quickly, but with assistance appearing directly on the scene, the flames were soon extinguished.

WIDOW STARVED SELF IN GRIEF

Succumbs to Eleven Months of Sorrow After Nine Years of Bliss.

FORCIBLY FED

NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—The death of Mrs. Florence Dunstan, of Hollis Queens, in St. John's Hospital, Long Island City, from gastroenteritis Friday was attributed by her friends Saturday to self-starvation. It had been necessary to feed her forcibly for eleven months. She had been trying for almost a year to starve herself to death because of her grief for her husband, Eugene, who died December 22 last.

They had been married nine years and the idea of Christmas without her husband at her side affected Mrs. Dunstan so profoundly that from that day it was impossible to persuade her to take food voluntarily. In spite of her resistance, nourishment was administered and her life was prolonged.

She failed progressively in strength and health, however, and was taken to the hospital last month. Physicians there were unable to do more however than to continue the forcible feeding measure which Mrs. Dunstans relatives had been compelled to adopt, and in spite of the scientific care she received she continued to languish.

For several months prior to her removal to the hospital she had been under the care of a physician, who had sought in vain to stimulate an interest in life in his patient, believing that that alone could save her.

Mrs. Dunsan was thirty-six years old.

WINTER SETS IN.

Motor Traffic Stopped In Northern Ontario—The Sleighs Made Their First Appearance.

TORONTO, Dec. 1.—(Canadian Press.)—Sweeping down from the northland, old man Winter has laid his first grip on Ontario Two feet of snow on level, country roads drifted to fence tops, blockade of motor traffic and jingle of sleigh bell tell story from Owen Sound and Bruce peninsula. The general use of snowshovel, anticipation of end of fall plowing and appearance of cutters is message from Brantford and Western Ontario.

In Toronto while mantle was but a token, Broom sufficed to clear city walks. Two-day storm, said to be heaviest in many years for season, was still in progress last night in Georgian Bay district, according to despatches.

Stop Coughing

The simplest and best way to stop coughs, colds, croup, bronchial, 'flu' and la grippe coughs is to take

A BAD COLD DEVELOPED INTO BRONCHITIS

Mrs. Levi Ogden, Amherst Shore, N.S., writes:—"My baby girl had a very bad cold which turned to bronchitis, and she could not sleep at night for the coughing. I gave her everything I could think of to relieve her, but nothing seemed to do her any good, and she was not getting any better. I was advised, by a friend, to try

DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP

I did so, and after giving her a few doses I saw good effects so I kept on with it. I gave her two bottles, and her cough soon left her, and now she is as well as can be. I cannot praise 'Dr. Wood's' enough; it is certainly a wonderful medicine."

This preparation has been on the market for the past 35 years; manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

BOY, SIX, KILLS SISTER, WHILE THEY PLAY MOVIES

NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—The rain kept Joe and Mary Conciglia indoors Saturday and time hung heavy. Tony Cachilo, who, like Joe, is six and in the first grade at school, came over to their home at 1052 Sixty-sixth street, Brooklyn, and suggested that they play "movies." He would be the hero, Joe could be Montana outlaw and Mary, although only four, would be the beautiful heroine.

They rigged themselves out to play the parts, but Joe outshone the others, for he had the best "prop" of all, a dusty automatic pistol he had found on a bedroom shelf. The chase led from the dining room across the Western badlands, and at last Joe was cornered in a canyon back of the parlor table. He pointed the pistol at Tony and pulled the trigger twice. When Tony still came on he turned the weapon on Mary. His hand flew up at the sharp discharge and the bullet struck the little girl in the forehead.

Their mother, Angelina, who had been ill and was resting in the bedroom, rushed out. She called a doctor, but Mary had been killed instantly.

IDLE CURIOSITY.

Idle curiosity is a disease, says Bundesen, Health Commissioner of Chicago. He claims that the chronic looker-on is a victim of "spectatoritis."

Such a person, says Bundesen, "may now and then make a suggestion or an observation, but usually he is quiet. After the show or game, he goes home, sits down and calls it a day. The chronic eye-witness is usually sedentary in his habits. He thinks more of his stomach than of his health. He would much rather be a bystander and let the other fellow do it."

In a way, it's too bad that baseball is so popular. Children get beneficial exercise from it. But for most grownups, baseball is a theatrical performance.

The spectators sit back and watch, the same as at a movie.

Golf does. And it's fine for health, that golf is swiftly growing in popularity.

So-called "spectatoritis" in its most pronounced form is evident in the crowds that gather to watch diggers excavating for sewers and pipes. The watchers stand in a half-trance, as if expecting to see buried treasure dug out. Maybe they do.

The psychology of idle curiosity has never been fully fathomed.

A woman faints on a crowded sidewalk. Now, fainting is not an uncommon event. Nor is there anything especially important or interesting about it. Yet people fight to get up for a close look. Police have difficulty shoving them back. Even if they know that the fainting is not out of the ordinary, they crowd around. Few men are ever too busy to rubber-neck.

A man once bet $5,000 that he could assemble an excited crowd of 5,000 people in five minutes at one of the most congested street intersections in New York City. He won. All he had to do was stop on the sidewalk and look into the sky with a startled expression. Nearby pedestrians also stopped. They wanted to see what interested him. Presto! a mob—and police reserves had to be called.

Life must be dull, the way so many of us are afraid we'll miss something. . . . Stand aside! a horse has just fallen in the street.

JACKIE COOGAN'S SALARY.

Jackie Coogan is earning more than half a million dollars a year, it's claimed. Yet his parents are only paying him $18 a week! He says, "As I get older, I will be advanced."

The idea, of course, is to make him appreciate money.

It should keep him from becoming "spoiled." Many parents will think $18 a week is too much for a lad of his age. His vast earning power and the luxury in which he lives must be taken into consideration. Everything is relative, and $18 isn't any more to Jackie than 50 cents to the average lad. Jackie returned from Europe recently with 27 trunks.

He talked to the reporters sensibly, intelligently.

The children of our generation do not have enough respect for money. The man who in boyhood thought a penny was as big as a house now has a son who is insulted at an offer of less than a quarter.

Maybe this is the root of what's wrong with modern youth in so many cases.

A child who isn't taught the "value of money" will go out into the world under a great handicap. It's worth the cost of a trip to New York just to take the children to the top of the Woolworth building and impress on them that this magnificent structure was the creation of a proper appreciation of the power of nickels and dimes. Transactions are in dollars, profits in cents.

Jackie Coogan is said to have to "work" for all the money he gets to spend. Whenever he figures out an idea for putting more snap into his movies, he gets a bonus of 75 cents. For a new gag he is given half a dollar.

Here, again, is wisdom. It keeps Jackie on the alert; stimulates his mind. He is absorbing the wholesome policy of furnishing service for every reward.

We know a shrewd father who has never given his son anything without making him earn it. If the boy wants even a penny he must perform a service even though it be no more than emptying a waste-basket for his mother. A trip to a movie must be earned by doing a chore, by keeping his belongings in order for a given period, or by being prompt at meals.

Honesty is in actually earning everything we get. And parents cannot begin too early to get this idea into youthful brains.

CROSSWORD PUZZLE CYCLE.

Midnight was approaching. The Pullman sleeper swayed with what would have been rhythm, had it not been for a flat wheel. In the smoking compartment sat three men. The youngest, in his thirties, lit a fresh cigarette.

"I notice the country has gone bugs on crossword puzzles," said he. "A great many people seem to think it's something new. Why, one of my earliest recollections is working out things like crossword puzzles in magazines like St. Nicholas. That was 25 or more years ago. They were quite the craze in those days. And now, like a bolt out of the blue and for no apparent reason, the same craze again sweeps through the public. History repeats. There is nothing new under the sun."

Up spoke the middle-aged man, lighting a cigar: "The origin of the crossword puzzle is farther back than your childhood, young man. The Rev. Dr. Charles Francis Potter of New York City, in a recent sermon traced the crossword puzzle back to the tetragrammaton, a sort of magic acrostic which was one of the charms used in the Middle Ages to keep the devil away.

"It certainly gets my goat, the way so many people waste hour after hour of precious time on these fool things. If I could get my employees a third as interested in their work . . ."

A tolerant smile from the white-haired old man who had been listening as he gazed out into the night. He lit his pipe.

"I used to feel the same way about the crossword puzzle craze that swept the country 50 years ago. But the older I get, the more I realize that such things train the brain to be alert. Not to mention that they afford man an innocent, harmless hobby for relaxation in which his nervous tension is loosened and his brain recuperates.

"After all, why try to sweep back the tide with a broom? Crossword puzzles come in waxes or cycles just as surely as business depressions, religious revivals, dancing crazes, disease pandemics and others of an endless list.

"Everything is cyclic, forever repeating. No one can explain it, except that cycles seem to be the pulsations of rhythmic psychic forces that play through the public like electric current through the filament of a lamp. Man is like a radio receiving set, through which play the impulses or vibrations from some distant and unseen broadcasting station. . . . I am an old man; and soon I may pass through the black tunnel and learn the secret. Who knows?"

FOREIGN OPINION AND EGYPT.

We shall be seriously misled if we imagine that responsible people in either the United States or France are full of righteous indignation over the present British policy in Egypt. Professional critics of either Great Britain or their own home-grown "Imperialism" in both countries are sputtering about the severe measures taken by the wicked Tories over so trivial an incident as the assassination of a Sirdar. They accuse the British Government of taking advantage of this unfortunate episode to load the whole Egyptian nation with chains; whereas the truth is that they themselves are taking advantage of the situation to engage in their favorite exercise of assailing "Imperialism" and especially British Imperialism.

But organs of opinion in both nations to which we have been accustomed to attach weight, are openly supporting the policy of the Baldwin Ministry in Egypt. We publish today long extracts from editorials in the New York Times (Democrat) and the New York Herald-Tribune (Republican), each the leading journal of its ilk in the United States, and both arguing with convincing logic in favor of the action which Great Britain has felt compelled to take. In our news columns will be found a despatch from the Cairo correspondent of Le Matin, a leading Paris journal, strongly commending the course adopted by Lord Allenby.

If Americans were inclined to seek a parallel for the British attitude toward Egypt, they could probably find it in Cuba better than anywhere else. Cuba is free and independent, so long as she exercises her freedom and independence in such fashion as not to imperil American interests. Whenever the Washington Government thinks it necessary, it intervenes in Cuba and dictates quite in the style of the British in Egypt. And this is entirely proper. The American nation cannot be asked to tolerate a nuisance or a menace at so vital a point as the Gulf of Mexico. We fancy that if an American envoy were shot down in the streets of Havana, it would not be long until an American garrison would occupy Morro Castle.

Egypt holds quite as vital a strategic point in relation to the safety of the British Empire as Cuba does in relation to the safety of the United States—and one immensely more difficult to control. Cuba could not possibly get very far out of hand. No matter what she did, the Americans are in a position to overwhelm her in a few days. But trouble in Egypt might grow to dangerous proportions, especially in view of her position in the Moslem world; and Great Britain might easily find herself threatened by Egyptian hostility as a critical time when she would have neither men nor leisure to deal with it. So, if the artery of the Suez is to be surely safeguarded, she must act promptly, stifle the flames before they become too high, and establish security at this crucial spot while her hands are free elsewhere.

Of course, the assassination of Sir Lee Stack was not an isolated incident. As our London cable pointed out yesterday, it was merely the last—though the most startling—of a long series of political crimes, all hatched in the simmering cauldron of anti-British agitation. As the "Le Matin" correspondent says—and he is no prejudiced witness—"the manifestations were no longer expressions of popular sentiment, but were systematically organized by a party whose excesses the (Zagloul) Government, or at least certain of its members, dare not repress." The British would have had to act in any case. The brutal bullets of the assassins only precipitated that necessary action.

Talk of reference to the League of Nations is friendly neither to Great Britain nor to the league. Egypt is not a member of the league. The British regard any dispute with her as a domestic quarrel. They would resent any effort to refer the matter to the league. The league will have quite enough to do if it manages to keep the peace between foreign nations without trying to intervene in the relations of such peoples as, say, the French and the Moors, the Italians and the Tripolitans, the Americans and the Cubans. —Montreal Star.

A THOUGHT.

PASTOR OBEYED LAW OF CHURCH

sacrament by Bishop Manning. It seemed that we might never be married—a sufficient reason for my refusing the offer to have my house turned into a palace too magnificent for my humble fortune as a rector of the Church of the Ascension.

'However, at a time when my trust in the affection for Mrs. Lydig were in the ascendancy, I authorized the alterations and the $32,000 contract was signed. Mrs. Lydig, I am sure, dreamed then, only of a dwelling fit to house the graces with which her affection endowed me. That dream ended!"

Dr Grant paused, then abruptly revealed for the first time that it was he who was responsible for breaking the betrothal and that in so doing he had been inspired by the desire to submot to the principles of Episcopal faith as exemplified by Bishop Manning, the head of that diocese.

Religious Scruple.

"For what I considered the greatest good I renounced Mrs. Lydig. The breaking of our engagement was ascribed to her. Officially it was her act. However, the break can be definitely ascribed to my religious scruples.

"With the break naturally came a severance of all other relations, including the semi-business one of our joint interest in the construction work on my Bedford Village home. Mrs. Lydig withdrew her financial support of the project I found myself saddled with a $32,000 contract and nowhere near that sum to meet the obligation.

"I left Ascension pulpit a poor man. In order to pay the contractors I had to scrape together all my savings and to mortgage Beaver Lodge and other properties to the hilt. That I should be financially ruined is a fact that I can face with what courage I have although I believe that financial worries are partly responsible for the present state of my health—but what is hard to face is the indisputable fact that friendships I once could claim are now turned to bitter hatreds.

"I am torn between regard for the truth and regard for old associates. I can claim that, in the trial through which I am now passing, I shall test to the limit the efficiency of the Commandment of the Lord:

Truth to Come Out.

"If your brother smite you on one cheek, turn ye the other also to him!"

"I can only wait and hope. I foresee that the whole truth will become known, in the natural course of human events. And I am morally supported by the thought that I have my precious freedom—oh, how precious—at its own great price At least, I have that now—nothing else."

Dr. Grant paused, as though no more need be said, but after a moment he added:

"Not for anything would I turn back!"

Not a word of reproach had he for the conduct of the woman who had been betrothed to him.

R. H. WEBB ELECTED MAYOR OF WINNIPEG

Defeated S. J. Farmer by a Majority of 4,804.

WINNIPEG, November 29. — Col. R. H. Webb, hotel manager, is to be mayor of Winnipeg for 1925. Yesterday he was elected by a majority of about 4,804 over S. J. Farmer, Winnipeg's Labor mayor for the past two years.

Webb's vote was 22,067 and Farmer's 17,263.

Col. Webb, the first Canadian officer to be decorated in the war, came home with the medals of the D.S.O., the M.C., and the Croix de Guerre, and he had been six times mentioned in despatches.

He was made commander of the 47th Battalion in December, 1917, and in March of the following year he lost a leg at Oppy Wood.

For ten years before the war Col. Webb had been engaged in manufacturing and lumbering in Ontario and British Columbia. Since the war he has been engaged in financial enterprises.

MONTREAL GRAIN.

MONTREAL, November 30.—The export business on grain here Saturday was reported to be very quiet, owing to the continued limited demand from foreign buyers, and in consequence local exporters showed little disposition to operate in cash grain here while the local dealers seemed to have ample supplies on hand to meet immediate wants, and the market on the whole was dull with no change in prices to note.

Car lots of Ontario No. 3 extra malting barley was quoted at $1.08; No .3 grade at $1.07 per bushel, extrack; No. 2 Ontario white oats at 62c; No. 3 grade at 60c; and No. 4 grade at 58c per bushel, ex-store.

The feature of the millfeed situation was the further strength that developed and prices scored another advance of $1 per ton for all lines, which makes a net rise of $2 per ton for the week. Prices for rolled oats were steady.

The trade in butter was moderately active and prices were firm at the recent advances in prices quoted.

There was some business done on spot in cheese but the del and from foreign buyers continued inactive.

The egg situation was decidedly more active than it has been of late owing to a good demand from foreign sources.

Prices were firm. The demand for crop beans was good and prices were quated at $2.75 and $2.85 per bushel.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

Chicago, November 29. — Preparations for the expected big deliveries here on Monday on December contracts outweighed in the wheat market to-day the effect of unfavorable weather for the Argenti crop.

Closing quotations on wheat were unsettled, at 5-8c net lower to 1-8c gain; December 1.53 7-8 to 1.54 and May 1.62 3-8 to 1.62½, with corns 1-8 to 1 1-8c, oats at 1-2c decline to 1-8c advance and provisions unchanged to 30c higher.

STERLING RATES.

MONTREAL, November 30. — Sterling exchange rates were quoted here on Saturday as:

Sterling demand, $4.62.

DREAMS

When one dreams of mingling in a hotel lobby with many friends, it is likely the dreamer will soon go on a journey which will take him into places of enjoyment.

Such a dream also bespeaks of coming wealth and power and in all ways bids of success and happiness.

Interpretations

To see in your visions a park bench, and then sit on the bench to rest means that you soon will have comfort from annoying worries.

You will have a change of fortune if you see yourself fishing; good fortune if you are catching fish, bad fortune if your line is always bare.

HEALTH FABLES.

PULL THE OARS.

"Did you do any rowing?" the physical trainer asked Mr. Mann when the latter returned from his vacation.

"Naw, I let the kid do it. What do I want to row for?" was the reply.

To those who may not have been on a vacation a wise tip is this: Get in a little rowing every day if you happen to be near a lake.

Or, if there is a park lake, go out and do a turn there once in a while.

This failing, there is still the rowing machine at the gymnasium.

For there are few exercises, in which play and work mingle, that beat rowing for the development of arms, shoulders and backs. Leg muscles are also aided, and few muscles of the body escape some benefit.

It should not be overdone, particularly at first, but the distance rowed can be increased gradually, and it is surprising what benefit is to be gained; also how far one may row without noticing the distance.

IN MILLBROOK AND DISTRICT

Mission Band Held a Meeting—Personal Mention.

MILLBROOK, Nov. 29.—The "Sunshine" Mission Band of the Methodist Church held its first meeting for some months on Wednesday evening, the President, Jean Burnham, being in the chair.

About thirty boys and girls were in attendance, and the Secretary, Walter Sayles, was instructed to begin a new membership list and enroll the names as the annual fee of ten cents per member was paid. Five dollars pays for a life membership in the Mission Band, and the local organization has seventeen names on this list, many of whom are not now residents in Millbrook, but maintain an interest in the work being done.

Mrs. Offa Williamson, the newly-appointed Superintendent of the band, gave an interesting and instructive talk on "Life in the Sahara Desert," the question and answer method employed forming an excellent means of fixing the facts in the minds of the listeners.

The C.G.I.T. group withdraws its meeting one evening each month in favor of the Mission Band, the missionary instruction which their programme calls for being given in this manner, the older girls being a help to the leader in occasionally preparing a talk, assisting with special music and in other ways.

Before the boys and girls left for home, Mrs. Williamson provided a generous supply of home-made candy and "camel" cookies, which was evidently much enjoyed.

The regular meeting of the band is held on the second Tuesday of each month at 7 p.m.

Addressed Meeting.

Stanford Symons and H. James of Bowmanville addressed the combined C.S.E.T. organizations in the Methodist Church on Tuesday evening, presenting their respective claims as candidates for the Boys' Parliament, which meets in Toronto during Christmas week.

There are several candidates running in Durham County, Oshawa, Port Hope, Millbrook, Bowmanville and other points, having nominated boys who are competing for the honor of being "member" when the Parliament assembles.

Voting takes place on Saturday, November 29th, 'teen age boys who are members of registered C.S.E.T. groups having the right to use the ballot. The local polling booth will probably be in the Presbyterian Sunday School-room.

Day of Prayer.

The annual day of prayer, under the auspices of the Woman's Missionary Society, was held in the league room of the Methodist Church on Thursday, the afternoon session beginning at 2.30 p.m. and the evening gathering at 7 o'clock.

The attendance was not as large as such an important occasion had led the leaders to expect, but those present reaped the benefit of the marked spiritual atmosphere which prevailed throughout.

Four periods were arranged for in the afternoon, the leaders being Mrs. T. H. Aiken, the subject of whose half hour was "Thy Kingdom Come"; Mrs. J. H. George, who presented "Our Neighbors"; Mrs. C. W. Richards, with "The Flowery Kingdom," and its workers as special objects for prayer; and the final half hour under the charge of the Mission Band, with Mrs. O. Williamson presiding, "The Sunrise Kingdom," and its needs, especially in view of the reconstruction work necessary because of the havoc wrought by the earthquake not many months since, being remembered in the prayers offered.

A chorus, "Yes, Jesus Loves Them," was sung by Jean Stinson, Margaret Fallis, Dorothy McDowell and Annie McMahon. The closing hymn, "Jesus Feels So Sorry When We're Doing Wrong," was specially chosen for the boys and girls.

Mrs. (Rev.) F. W. Howard presided at the opening period in the evening, "The Kingdom in the Homeland" being her subject. Mrs. J. McKnight followed with "The Workers of Tomorrow," the pastor, Rev. Mr. Howard, closing with the benediction.

Late Mrs. Thos. Hadden.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Thos. Hadden took place from the W. J. E. Gillott undertaking parlors on Friday afternoon. Rev. Canon Allen had charge of the services. Interment was in the Presbyterian Cemetery beside her husband, who predeceased her several years ago.

The deceased was for some years a resident of Millbrook and was a daughter of the late James Saunders. Moving to Toronto several years ago, she made her home with her daughter, Mrs. A. Rooney, and passed away on Wednesday, November 26th, the remains being brought to Millbrook for interment on the 12.35 C.N.R. train Friday.

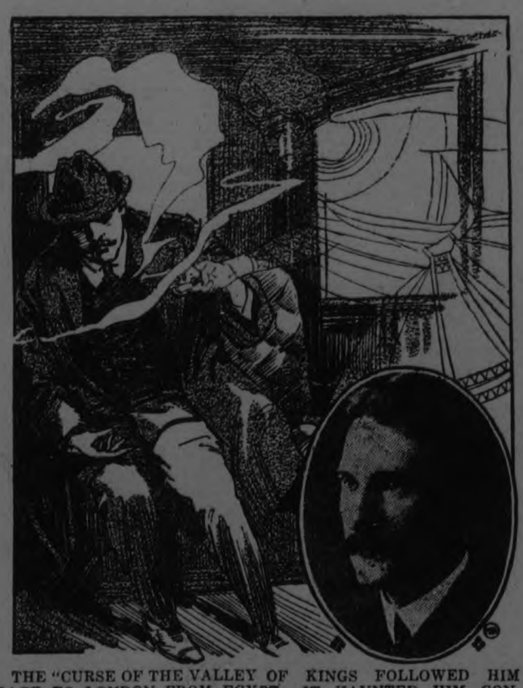
Egypt's Curse



THE "CURSE OF THE VALLEY OF KINGS FOLLOWED HIM BACK TO LONDON FROM EGYPT. IT HAUNTED HIM CONTINUALLY. FINALLY H. G. EVELYN-WHITE, EGYPTOLOGIST (BELOW), COMMITTED SUICIDE WHILE ON HIS WAY TO THE CORONER'S INQUEST INTO THE DEATH OF A WOMAN FRIEND, WHO HAD ENDED HER LIFE BECAUSE HE REJECTED HER LOVE.

By MILTON BRONNER.

LONDON, Nov. 26.—Black curses of ancient Egypt and their terrible train of disease, disaster and death following along even in the twentieth century—

All these things seem very far away from busy London. Egypt is of the east eastern. London is of the west western.

Yet the other afternoon, the long black shadow of Egypt fell across the gas-lit, stuffy, commonplace room where a London coroner was holding an inquest into the suicide of H. G. Evelyn-White, famous Egyptologist explorer, and member of the faculty of the University of Leeds.

Everything seemed fairly clear. The dead man had a woman friend, Miss Helen Nind. She was in love with him. He did not reciprocate.

She had spoken of her despair and had hinted of killing herself. One day she did so, using poison.

Evelyn-White was summoned to attend the inquest into her death. He had nothing to fear and nothing to conceal. Everything had been strictly honorable.

But Evelyn-White shot and killed himself in a taxicab while on his way to the coroner's. Authorities thought it was merely the rash act of a supersensitive scholar who loathed publicity of this sort.

He Was Warned of "Curse."

And then in the silence of the court room was read this last fragment from a letter by the dead man to his best friend:

"I knew there was a curse on me, though I had leave to take those manuscripts to Cairo. The monks told me the curse would work all the same. Now it has done so."

The mystery soon was cleared up. For many years Evelyn-White had worked for the Metropolitan Museum of New York, conducting explorations in various parts of Egypt.

Some of his discoveries are recorded in his noteworthy book, "The Sayings of Jesus from Oxyrynchus." This was based upon papyri he had found.

Three years ago he was working at Wady Natrum, a valley seventy miles from Cairo. There, in an ancient Coptic monastery, he found a secret room in which were a number of fragments of very ancient Coptic and Arabic manuscript. He obtained permission from the head of the monastery to bring the manuscripts to Cairo for study. The monk, however, warned him there was a curse upon those who tampered with ancient things in Egypt. Evelyn-White, a highly educated man, had heard such things before and at first paid no attention. But latterly, worried by various matters, his nerves were on the verge of breakdown.

Others Have Fallen, Too.

The memory of the monk's prediction came back to him. What at first seemed absurd and improbable, now seemed highly possible and probable. He was obsessed with the idea. He aimed the pistol at his head, but the finger which pulled the trigger was that of somebody who lived in Egypt centuries ago.

People here, who dabble in books on black magic and other things out of the east, see in his story confirmation of the belief that tampering with the tomb of Tutankhamen in Egypt has also blighted the lives of those connected with it. They point to this sinister record:

The Earl of Carnarvon, discoverer of the tomb and financial backer of the expedition, died April 5, 1923, after he had been bitten by a mosquito.

Woolf Joel, son of the famous South African millionaire and sportsman, died on ship while on the way to Egypt last November. He was in Egypt at the time Tut's tomb was opened and brought home the first movies of scenes in the Valley of Kings.

Colonel Aubrey Herbert, brother of the Earl of Carnarvon, died last fall suddenly. He also had entered Tut's tomb and was reported to have said something dreadful was going to happen in the Herbert family.

January 18 last, Sir Archibald Douglas Reid, famous radiologist, died suddenly in Switzerland. He had agreed to X-ray the mummy of King Tut.

The charge against Hobbs, who obtained $200,000 as his share of the money paid by the Rajah to conceal his relations with Mrs. Maude Robinson was of receiving of stolen property abroad. The lawyers clerk was caught last night trying to escape to Holland. He had a considerable amount of money on his person including English, French, Belgian and American notes.

EVERY MAN A POET.

"If the word 'poetry' is mentioned to an average man he will be ready to call for a policeman," says Arnold Bennett. And yet although the man in the street may ignore and scorn poetry, the fact remains that every man is a poet.

Any one falling deeply and blindly in love is in spirit, if not in expression, a poet. If you are thrilled by a wonderful sunset, or moved by the sight of a helpless, smiling baby, or even if you are a woman in raptures over a new hat, you are at the moment a poet. In short, whenever a powerful emotion reigns supreme you are a poet.

But the obvious objection is, of course, that powerful emotions rarely reign supreme. One doesn't fall in love every day, wonderful sunsets are scarce, babies do not always smile, and even new hats are not daily occurrences.

Nevertheless, every man is an unconscious poet every time he speaks.

The Gods of Greece.

One of the characteristics of a poet is that he uses many allusions to mythology. So does the ordinary man when he speaks. He talks of a florist, little realizing that the word is derived from the name of Flora, the goddess of flowers; he describes friends as jovial, saturnine, mercurial, all words taken from the name of the old Greek gods; and he may even refer to the great if he uses the word panic. There are quite fifty such common words which contain mythological allusions, in addition to all the common expressions such as "Rich as Crœsus," "Heel of Achilles," and "In the arms of Morpheus."

Alteration's Artful Aid.

Alliteration is another feature of poetry. Alliteration is the recurrence of the same letter at the beginning of two or more syllables. This is sometimes very charming in verse, as, "Soft as the slumbers of a saint," and is particularly vivid in ordinary speech. Frequently the average man uses the art of alliteration when he quotes proverbs or maxims. "Out of the frying-pan into the fire," "To rule the roost," "Look before you leap," "All is not gold that glitters," are but a few of the many which a moment's thought will suggest.

Even rhyme is used by almost everybody, and is seen in "A friend in need is a friend indeed," "A stitch in time saves nine," "Birds of a feather flock together."

The Poetry of Sounds.

But the most interesting device of all which is supposed to be the prerogative of the poet, but which is also quite familiar to the average man, is that of onomatopœia. Onomatopœia is simply the formation of a word or a phrase which is a resemblance to the found of the actual thing represented. Two examples from poetry are:—

"Then the pilots of the place put out brisk and leapt on board,"

"And on the mere the wailing died
And in daily speech all men are poets, for they all make use of words in which the sound is an echo of the sense. Common words such as clucking, cooing, howling, bleating, purring, bump, bang, swish, crash, and hosts of others are, merely printed symbols describing sounds.

Cuckoo, peewit, whistle, thunder are further examples of familiar words

I have but briefly indicated a huge subject for thought. The study of the spoken and the written word is extremely interesting, and not the least of the inspiring discoveries is that every man every day is a poet.

CHATHAM LIKES MANAGER PLAN

System Has Proved Successful in Civic Government.

CHANGE MADE IN 1920

By R. W. ANGUS.

CHATHAM, Dec. 1.—Of more than usual interest to Londoners, who will vote on the question of a change in the present form of civic government in London, is the experience of their neighboring city to the west. The progressive city of Chatham in 1920 voted, by a large majority, for a change from the old form of civic government to the form on which the citizens of London are to be given an opportunity of expressing themselves at their next civic elections. The actual securing of the assent of the citizens of Chatham was only a preliminary step to placing the new scheme in efficient operation. An investigation indicated that cities who passed only a local by-law outlining the system did not go far enough, and that a reversal to the old form could easily be carried out by simply a vote of the Council. In order to place the scheme on an efficient footing the City of Chatham prepared a special bill which was called an "Act Respecting the City of Chatham" and which was assented to by the Ontario Legislature in April, 1921. This act of Parliament gave the city the authority to adopt a system of municipal government by a smaller elective Council, who were to be elected from the city at large, and to employ a general administrative head of the city, who was to be known as the city manager.

The City of Chatham Act also placed the date of municipal elections as the first Monday in November. The City Council was to be composed of a mayor and seven aldermen. Four aldermen and the mayor were to be elected for two years and the three other aldermen for one year. The duties of the city manager and his responsibility were left to the Council so elected to decide.

The new form of civic government was placed in operation in May, 1922, and the Council appointed Mr. C. H. R. Fuller, a graduate of the University of Toronto, and the former city engineer, as city manager.

To date it has evidently made good, in the opinion of the majority of the citizens of Chatham. There were, however, several details which it was felt advisable to change after the new form had been functioning for a year. For instance, it was deemed advisable to advance the date of elections to the first Monday in December, and also to elect the mayor for a one-year term instead of two. These amendments were made with the idea of creating a greater interest in civic elections and are similar to what is proposed for London.

Proved Success.

The Council-manager form of civic control has now been in operation in Chatham for two and a half years. Its success has been greatly due to the perfect understanding of its operation between the members of the city council and the city manager. In order that the people will not lose control of their own business, the manager may be discharged by the Council at their pleasure. Also, in order that the scheme may function properly, the city manager must be given a free hand to administer the city's organization.

The City Council decides on the general policies of the city and instructs its manager to carry out these policies, but do not instruct him how to carry them out. The manager may advise on the policies, but he must do what he is told to do and carry out the policies of the city in the most efficient way possible. He is non-political. He is appointed by the City Council and appoints all other civic employees except the city auditor.

The result of the plan in Chatham may be stated generally as follows:

It is found that the people may fix responsibility for the administration of the policies decided upon by the City Council, who are their elected representative.s

Departments work in greater harmony with each other and city employees are better satisfied, because they are answerable to the same person.

The individual member of ths Council is relieved of executive details and is more free to give his mind to the general policies of the city as expressed by public opinion.

The political head of the city is retained through the mayor. The administration of the city is in trained hands on account of the permanency of the manager, who is able to carry out policies extending over a period of years.

It allows a centralized civic purchasing department similar to that of a private business. It allows a closer check on accounts and speeds up city business.

It does not necessarily mean a lower tax rate, but the Council-manager form of government does give the taxpayer value for every cent that is spent.

Not an Experiment.

To-day there are approximately 5,000,000 people on the American continent governed by the Council-manager plan of civic government. There are 344 cities and towns operating under this plan, of which 14 are in Canada. Chatham has the honor of being the first city in the Province of Ontario to adopt the plan by special act of Parliament. The City of Cleveland has adopted the plan lately, as has Cincinnati, thereby showing that the plan is adaptable to the larger cities as well as the small ones. The rapidly growing profession of city management has come to the front in the last 10 years, and to-day there are many trained, non-political, civic administrators engaged in this work.

The plan is not an experiment, as may be seen by its growth. The citizens of London are not being asked to vote on a fad. They are asked to vote on a form of government that has been tried under difficult conditions and has come out on top, with the backing of all good citizens, as a success and as an example to other municipalities.

Of course, it is quite evident to all that the success or failure of any civic administration depends very largely upon the calibre of the men entrusted with its enforcement. In this respect Chatham has been singularly fortunate. In City Manager Fuller the people of this city have an administrator of exceptional ability, and one of the great reasons why the system has been a great success here is the fact that a man of Mr. Fuller's ability and attainments is at the head of it.

67 COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Your readers have probably had their appetite for statistics satiated during the past few months. Still they will, no doubt, want to know something of the work accomplished by the hospital to which they have so generously contributed in the past. They are shareholders in a Mission of Mercy. Their dividends are not paid in coin of the realm. May I trespass upon your space to outline what those dividends are?

Firstly, the daily average of children occupying cots in the Hospital for Sick Children was 255. The total cared for as in-patients was 6,397. That is equivalent to the population of a good-sized Ontario town.

And secondly, the out-patient department. This is a wing of offices given over to consultation and minor operations. On an average there were 190 young callers a day.

That is where the dividends are earned—in the difference made in the lives of thousands of children through the voluntary contributions which render it possible to maintain an institution where pallid cheeks become rosy and twisted limbs are made straight.

If that were not dividend enough, one might try to estimate the enormous salvage of child-life in Ontario which has taken place since "Sick Kids" doctors and "Sick Kids" nurses have been going out through this province equipped with a knowledge of children's diseases, which they could not get except in some such highly specialized and pre-eminently efficient institution as the Hospital for Sick Children.

On this year's service the Hospital expended $345,126 and finds itself in the hole to the extent of $134,284. What comes in around Christmas-time keeps the Hospital going. So long as the word "Christmas" retains its original significance could any charity possibly enlist more of the sympathy of your readers or entitle itself to more of their support?

Faithfully yours,

I. E. ROBERTSON,
Chairman Appeal Committee

A MINUTE OF MERCY COSTS FIFTY CENTS

PASTORAL LETTER ON CHURCH UNION

To members of St. Paul's Church:

Dear Brethren,—The time has now come when I must declare my position on the subject of Church Union. You, the members of St. Paul's Church, know how well I have kept aloof from the discussion of a subject on which necessarily there has been a difference of opinion, and which might have seriously marred the peace of our Church life. I can no longer, however, remain silent. I am going into union and some of my reasons for so doing are as follows:

1. I believe it is God's will for me that I should go into the United Church. This being so I can obey no will but His will.

2. I believe, just as sincerely, that the Presbyterian Church has been divinely guided during all the years the subject has been under consideration and that she has been led of God it the step she has taken.

3. I believe the United Church will be a more efficient instrument for carrying on the work of God in this land than a divided church could possibly be.

4. I believe the crying needs of our great Northwest demand the help and resources of a United Church. Already there are over 1,200 United Churches, mostly in the West. To desert these churches now after our assembly authorized them to proceed with Union would be cruel.

5. I believe conditiots in the reignFo Field demand a United Christiandom. One thing is being made increasingly clear in the Foreign Field, namely, that these people do not want our denominationalism. They do want our Christ.

6. I believe that a United Christiandom is Christ's will for His Church. This is the first time in my life I have had an opportunity to help to answer the Master's prayer for the oneness of His children and I mean to avail myself of it.

7. I believe that loyalty to my Church demands that I should abide by the decisions of her highest courts. The Presbyterian Church in Canada has decided, in a constitutional way, to go into Union. As our Church is a democracy I feel it to be my duty to abide by the decision of the majority.

8. I believe it to be my duty to this congregation, which, in the deciding vote on the matter of Union in 1915, by an overwhelming majority, gave authority to the Assembly to proceed with Union. Honour compels me to remain loyal to the mandate which St. Paul's Church then gave to the Assembly on the matter.

9. I wish to continue a member of the Presbyterian Church in Canada. This I can only do by going with her into Union. If I withdrew I should separate myself from the Church of which I have been a minister for thirty years and from the Mother Church, which, as an entity, enters the Union.

10. I believe I am not giving up my Presbyterianism when I go into Union because the United Church is truly Presbyterian.

11. I believe this congregation will continue essentially the same in the United Church. It will continue its doctrine and form of worship as in the past. St. Paul's Church, for example, as a United Church, will be absolutely the same in the next twenty years as it has been in the last twenty. There need be no change, in any way, in the conduct of the services, in the office and duties of the eldership, the Board of Managers, or in any of its organizations. In our worship we shall continue to use our present Book of Praise.

12. I believe as I suffer no loss and no change in the United Church it would be a great act of selfishness upon my part, to hinder the Union Movement, which seems so evidently a movement of the Spirit of God more especially when I consider the advantages it will be to Home and Foreign Missions. I must not hinder a movement which makes no difference to me, but which makes such a vast difference to so many people in the outlying districts of our country.

In view of the above reasons for my being a Unionist, you will understand why, in the interests of St. Paul's Church, I should like to see every member of the Church go into the United Church. A split in the congregation would seriously cripple St. Paul's Church in the work she has been doing all these years, and more especially her splendid work in the cause of Missions at Home and Abroad. It would be a serious thing to divide the members of this great Church who ought more than ever to be united in the work of seeking to evangelize the world.

If anyone cannot go with us in the United Church, notwithstanding the fact that no change will take place in the form or substance of either preaching or worship, in the interests of the peace of the Church he should quietly withdraw. But I do not see why anyone should do this, as there is no vital principle at stake. As there seems to be no reason for anyone withdrawing I hope all will go forward, as one, into the United Church, and into the richer fellowship, and larger service of the coming days.

Very sincerely, your minister,
ROBT. POGUE.

St. Paul's Manse, Nov. 20, 1924.

RESCUED FROM ROCKS.

Freighter Niagara Dashed Against Rocks From Sunday Till Friday.

PORT DOVER, Ont., Dec. 1.—(Canadian Press.)—In a gale which prevailed last Sunday, four hundred foot steel freighter, Niagara, owned by Boland and Cornelius of Buffalo, bound from Sandusky, Ohio, to Port Colborne with cargo of coal lost her shoe Metal part which supports rudder became unmanageable and ship started drifting toward long point. In spite of bact that both anchors were dropped the craft did eventually ground on point, but, luckily, as subsequent evidence proved with bow pointing seaward owing to drag of anchors. There ship lay, pounded by heavy gales till Friday, when sea moderated to some extent and life saving crew at end of Long Point sent recruit here for tug to tow them around end of point and to windward of wreck.

Captain John A. Macaulay, of Port Dover, with tug Margaret left here and accompanied this danger ous manoeuver. Latest reports were that boat was heading up lake, with tgs in attendance.

KILLED IN EXPLOSION.

James Burk Blown 150 Feet By Explosion—Buildings Destroyed.

MONTREAL, Dec. 1.—(Canadian Press.)— One man, James Burke, was killed and one man injured when an explosion occurred this morning in Elevator B of the Montreal Harbor Commission on the water front. The explosion, which was supposed to have been caused by spontaneous combustion, took place o nthe ground floor of the building and wrecked the interior and roof of the structure. Fire started immediately to which was called practically all the fire fighting equipment of the city. Burke was blown a distance of 150 feet. One hundred men were working in the building at the time and had a remarkable escape.

Egyptian Government Has Accepted British Demands

CAIRO, Dec. 1.—Canadian Press—Although not yet officially announced, it is understood authoratively that the Egyptian Government has accepted all British demands made at the time of the assas sination of Sir Lee Stack.

The acceptance came after a lengthy conference yesterday, its first immediate consequence will be the evacuation by British of the Alexandria Customs House. Ministers of Education and Public Works have resigned and it is expected that the Minister of Communications will follow suit. No reasons are given for the resignations.

HOTEL FOR JEWS.

Max Bernstein's Memorial to Mother—New York Glimpses.

NEW YORK, Dec 1. .—At Delancey and Chrystie streets, in the heart of the East Side, the Libby Hotel is being reared. It will be the only big hotel in that neighborhood and it will be exclusively for Jews. It will be 12 stories high and will have 1,000 rooms. It also will have a lobby where Jews of all walks of life will gather.

The Libby Hotel is Max Bernstein's memorial to his mother. Max was 12 when he sailed past the Statue of Liberty 24 years ago. His story is the typical one of the successful immigrant boy.

His mother died soon after their arrival. At 15, Max had saved $50 and started a candy store. When it became successful he started a restaurant and then another. He had the first self-serve restaurant in the Jewish quarter. He named it Libby, his mother's name.

The idea of a Jewish hotel came when he saw out-of-town Hebrews sleeping in restaurant chairs.

Stenographers and clerks are working long hours during the big bull movement in Wall Street. The clerical force in some brokers' offices is on all night. These workers do not get overtime pay. Neither are they asking for raises. They know that they will get holiday bonuses, some of them at Thanksgiving, some at Christmas. Considered as a class the subordinates in Wall Street receive probably the lowest salaries in New York. But the bonus system gives workers in that line an incentive to stick through thick and thin.

Three years ago Clay Long, now a dancer in a Broadway revue, met a young fellow in Jackson, Tenn. Both were ambitious to write. The boy took up poetry. She gave up writing for a stage career. He used to wait every night for her at the stage door, but one night another who waited was favored. Then the poet was found dead. The lights of Broadway were as cold and bright as ever last night.

The newest way of making easy money in Gotham is to become a professional co-respondent in divorce cases. Large fees are paid to those who are willing to be the "young lady," or the "other man" in the proving of the only ground for divorce in this state. Since only circumstantial evidence is necessary and since it is not necessary that the third side of the triangle be publicly named the role is not particularly difficult to play. Size of the fee depends on the means of the parties td the divorce, but in all cases it is upwarH of $100.

The cloak and suit houses have given up the idea of establishing sales headquarters in Chicago and other western cities. Buyers refuse to buy there. It seems that half of the fun being a buyer is the annual or semi-annual trip to New York and its attendant festivities.

Dear Miss Grey: I'm 15 and old enough, I think, to go out to a movie sometimes with the other girls or a boy friend. My mother won't let me do this. Isn't is just because she's old-fashioned —Marilyn.

Is, she so old-fashioned? And isi t so long ago that she was 15 herself? I think not. I think it's because she remembers how very young a girl is at 15 and how little she knows really about takking care of herself then that she's taking such good care of you.

Dear Miss Grey: There's been a misunderstanding between me and the girl I play bridge with. Ought I go to them to explain things?—Mrs. Jane L.

No, I wouldn't. Did you ever happen to hear this bit of advice?—"Never explain. Your friends don't need it any your enemies won't believe it anyway." Wait for the girls to come to you. And it you don't, you'll have kept your dignity.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—I was amazed to read in The Examiner a strenuous and abusive protest regarding the change of modernism or infidelity now being made against prominent ministers in the daily press. This repudiation of their attitude comes too late. They are on record in a thousand ways. First of all, the Methodist Church issued from the headquarters at Toronto a series of pamphlets, explaining that social service would replace belief in the Bible as the Word of God, which, they affirmed, could no longer be maintained as the Word of God. Then we have Prof. Jackson's "Studies of the O.T.", which is in the Library, a mass of scoffings at the Bible and nothing else. Last summer he was brought out from England to occupy the pulpit of the Eaton Church in Toronto. He used to be professor at Victoria. Then, too, we have that preposterous sheet, The Christian Guardian, which seems not only to have cut loose from Christianity altogether, but to have turned upon Christ Himself. The truth is that unless the people of that once great church save their faith, Protestantism is doomed. But the wholesa le lying now being indulged in to deceive them is beyond belief. I knew what these "leaders" would do when the time came to save their face and fool the people, and I did my best to put them on record. Why is it that it is in Canada alone that this apostasy has arisen? We seem to be a downright vicious people in our Protestant non-conformist pulpits at anyrate, and nothing short of punishment will stop us. Is it any wonder that churches are tumbling?

J. H. BURNHAM.

To the Editor of the Examiner,

Dear Sir,—Through your courtesy the "Voice of the People" is used for many purposes, but it seems to the writer, mainly as an outlet for innumerable knocks and grouches, rarely for praise. Shall we then for once reverse the order of things and use this column, to express a little praise and appreciation to our local store keepers for the charming appearance of their window fronts, especially over this week end. Never were goods more cunningly displayed to beguile the beauty loving female. One sees lingerie so gracefully arranged, aided by beautiful shaded lights as to please everyone. Pass on and the most intricate collection of "everything" greets the eye, that one might almost expect any architect had been needed to draw up a plan for the windows of these real "bargain" stores. Farther on, exquisite china and glass artistically and tastefully placed before us keeps us standing in admiration and dolls. Oh! the largest and most varied family in existence, surely the rapturous gaze of the many children whose delight knew no bounds amply repaid the artist who presented this picture so pleasing. Space does not permit to enlarge on them individually, for all our stores must have co-operated in giving the citizens of Peterboro something pleasant to think about this week end and I am sure I am only one of hundreds who have thought that our store windows contribute largely to the brightening up of our city and I am certain our distinguished visitors of Friday must have thought the same thing.

Dec. 1, 1924.

Editor, Examiner:

Sir,—As may be seen in this and previous issues of the Examiner ads, the Ladies' Auxiliary to the G.W.V.A. are running their annual bazaar in the G.W.V.A. hall next Wednesday and Thursday. Our work lies among the wives and children of men who served overseas, and there are many cases which do not come under official assistance in any way, and through the months of September, October and November, necessitous cases have depleted our funds, which we hope to replenish from the bazaar. This event, and card parties, furnishes our revenue for a year's work, apart from the membership fees. Some months our bills amount to over $200 for coal, wood and provisions.

We earnestly appeal to every citizen to make a personal effort to see to it that our work is not crippled for lack of funds. Come and have tea with us next Wednesday and Thursday; do not "pass by on the other side."

We heartily thank our fellow citizens for their warm hearted help in previous years, and assure them that every dollar paid in to our work will be thankfully received and faithfully expended.

Thanking the Examiner for inserting this appeal.

Signed on behalf of the Peterborough branch of the Ladies' Auxiliary to the G.W.V.A.

S. E. DEVEY, President.

AN AMUSING LETTER.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—A few days ago an amusing letter, signed by a well-known Presbyterian minister, in which he indignantly objects to being called a Modernist, was given wide publicity. He says that he does not know what a Modernist is. He might well have added neither does anyone else. He blandly requests to be informed what a Modernist is. He well knows that no man living can tell him. Presbyterians we know, Anglicans we know, and Methodists we know, but who and what are Modernists?

In the course of my reading I have been unable to find that anybody of men have agreed upon and have published a statement of theological and religions doctrines subscription to which would entitle them to be known as Modernists. In the absence of such a document this term is merely a sort of theological nickname, and one can easily appreciate the objection of any self-respecting clergyman to having this nickname applied to him. The charge is frequently made, with how much foundation I am not prepared to say, that certain clergymen have ceased to believe in the distinctive doctrines of their respective churches, but have not carried their unbelief to such an extent as to surrender their positions, or the emoluments thereof.

But I would take the liberty of suggesting that instead of applying to such men a theological nickname which is devoid of any well-defined meaning, they be known in future as false Presbyterians, false Anglicans, or false Methodists as the case may be.

Towering in importance away above the important question of Church Union is the question of what the churches believe, and at the present time it is particularly unwise to cover up or obscure any religions or theological teachings by a designation that is indeterminate.

TWO HOME BANK DIRECTORS ARE GIVEN SENTENCE

Charles Barnard and Clarence Smith Sent to Ontario Reformatory.

BARNARD PROTESTS.

Jones Was Given Four Months and Ocean Smith Let Out on Suspended Sentence.

TORONTO, Dec. 1.—(Canadian Press).—Two Home Bank directors, Charles A. Barnard and Clarence F. Smith both of Montreal, convicted on charges under the Canadian Bank Act arising out of the collapse of the bank in August, 1923, were given terms in the Ontario reformatory by Judge Coatsworth this morning. Barnard gets 18 months and Sim six months. Sydney H. Jones who was the bank auditor, was given four months and sentence on Ocean G. Smith, accountant, was suspended.

In the case of Clarence Smith and Barnard "six months indeterminate", added to the six months and 18 months respectively and to the Sidney Jones sentence, "four months indeterminate."

Barnard was taken below by Constables a few minutes after sentence. Clarence F. Smith was taken away later and also Sidney H. Jones.

Before sentence was pronounced in any case there was a strenuous effort made by counsel to have judge Coatsworth again postpone sentence.

The application was made by A. C. McMaster, counsel for Clarence F. Smith supported by R. S. Robertson, K.C., counsel for Barnard. It was refused. R. H Greer, counsel for Sidney H. Jones said his client was at the end of his financial resources and could not appeal his conviction or his trial.

Court Crowded.

Long before court resumed at 10.30 every available seat was taken. A huge crowd gathered in lobbies eagerly awaiting the first news of the sentence. When the judge entered, the court room in front of the rail was filled with prominent lawyers. There was little that was dramatic except in the tense silence when the judge was about to pronounce sentence in each case. There was a decided hush when Barnard read a statement in his own defence in reply to the usual question: "Have you anything to say before sentence is pronounced upon you?' 'In his statement Barnard protested against the interpretation, His Honor had drawn from his actions as director of the bank and contended that his side of the story would reveal that he had put forth evry effort to do his duty to the bank and its shareholders.

Salary Scandalous.

Replying to the Montreal delegation who spoke on behalf of Clarence F. Smith, His Honor declared he had a public duty to perform, and after pointing out that Smith also faced another charge and a civil action, he pronounced sentence. When R. H. Greer, K.C., pleaded for clemency for Sidney Jones, His Honor remarked that he had received a large number of petitions in favor of Jones from a large body of splendid people. However, after stating that Jones had failed in his duty to the shareholders of the bank, Judge Coatsworth pronounced sentence.

Gordon L. Shaver, speaking on Ocean G. Smith's behalf, said Smith had insisted on going into the witness box and telling a frank story.

He declared that the salary Smith received from the bank was absolutely scandalous. Mr. Shaver asked that the Judge remember that his client had been used as a Crown witness.

Prominent Delegation.

A delegation of prominent men from Montreal, including J. W. Ross, W. M. Birks, General Dodds and A. Goodman, appeared to speak on behalf of Clarence Smith.

They told of Smith's splendid service during the war and of his general good reputation as a citizen of Montreal.

On the opening of court Mr. McMaster made his formal application for the postponement of sentence.

He said he desired further time to prepare his appeal. As the convicted men were under heavy bail, he said it could not make much difference if they were not sentenced now.

"I do not think it is in the public interest to postpone the sentences," said His Honor. "It is quite within the power of a higher court to grant bail at once, pending appeal. I will pass sentence and then accused can go to the higher court."

Mr. Robertson, counsel for Barnard, then supported the motion made by Mr. McMaster, and the Judge then allowed Barnard to read his statement.

The convicted director protested against the interpretation His Honor had placed upon the story of his actions as director of the bank. He said there was no dishonest desire but that he had performed his duties to the best of his ability, and that the collapse had resulted from things over which neither he nor any other directors had any control.

"I personally had nothing to do with the false statement," said Mr. Barnard, "and even the Crown does not contend that. I refrained from putting my side of the story in on advice of counsel. When it is told it will reveal that my actions were in the best interests of the bank, and my course will be vindicated."

His Honor, in giving sentence, said that his conviction implied neglect of the bank, and in view of the fact that he faced another charge, and that he was being sued for five million dollars, he would follow the precedent set in the parallel case of the Glasgow bank and sentence him to eighteen months in the Ontario Reformatory, with an indeterminate period thereafter of six months, less one day.

Avoid Penitentiary.

The bench made no explanatory comment on the sentence. Counsel who heard the sentences were of the opinion that the Judge wished to avoid making any single sentence so large as to necessitate the removal of the accused to the penitentiary. All the accused now can serve out their sentences in the reformatory, and there is also a chance for parole before the indeterminate additional sentences are completed.

All three men are in the city jail to-day. Prior to sentence this morning they were out on bail.

Lt.-Col. Simpson, Guelph, C. T. Young, Toronto, K. J. Dunstan, Toronto, E. J. Eckardt, Iroquois Falls, G. S. Matthews, Toronto.

The North Bay resolution, requesting the Government to restore the gold standard of Canada, was considered a subject upon which the delegates knew very little, and was therefore not put to a vote.

The Sault Ste. Marie resolution, requesting that the Dominion government take immediate action to increase the depth of water at the Sault Lock and through the river, so as to permit of the passage of larger vessels through the Canadian waterway, was amended and passed, recommending that the Dominion make an investigation of the situation as early as possible.

The delegates were thoroughly entertained, and at the luncheon tendered by the City of Toronto, Premier G. H. Ferguson stated that immediate action would be taken in the construction of a highway to Cochrane.

Hon. Charles McCrae, Minister of Mines, in two addresses, stated that the government was giving a bonus of one per cent. per unit in the production of iron ore, and that from his recent visit to England he was quite confident that considerable English capital will be forthcoming in the near future for the mineral development in Northern Ontario, which was practically seven-eighths of the total area of the province, all in the Pre-Cambrian area.

J. J. Duffus.

Leon. Frazer.

A hearty vote of congratulations was extended to Mr. J. J. Duffus, on his election to the 2nd Vice-Presidency of the Association for the ensuing year.

Automobile Driver's Licenses.

The Peterborough Chamber will oppose the resolution adopted at the anual meeting, which requests legislation requiring all motor vehicle drivers to secure a driver's license after examination.

Mr. Duffus maintained that the object of the resolution was to stop careless and reckless driving, and that this could be accomplished by the issuing of a driver's permit at the time of securing the markers, and on any cases of infraction of the Highway Traffic Act the permit could be revoked. The examination called for in the resolution would require a large staff of examiners and an additional burden to the motorists of more than half a million dollars at $1.00 per license.

Gas Rates.

In reply to a communication by the Chamber to the Hydro Electric Power Commission, requesting that consideration be given to the installation of the Tully Gas Generating System, which is now in operation in Belleville and proves to be considerably more economical, Sir Adam Beck states "the Engineers of the Commission have made a thorough investigation of the cost of operation in both Belleville and Peterborough, and can see no advantage at the present time in entailing capital expenditure for the installation of the Tully system."

The Chamber will take further action.

61 FIRE ALARMS IN PAST MONTH

Loss So Far This Year Is $25,600.00—396 Alarms In Past 11 Months.

The month of November was a busy month for the Peterboro Fire Fighters. They were called out to 61 different fires during the month. Up till the end of November this year they have answered 396 alarms or the average of 36 alarms a month. For 1923 there were 427 alarms and for the month of December 1923, there were 29 alarms. If this month's fires can be held down to 31, last year's record will be equalled. For the month of November 1923, there were 24 alarms, with one actual fire, which is a fire that causes a loss, while for November this year there were 61 alarms and 9 actual fires. In 1923 there were 53 actual fires, with a total loss of $159,981.89 and so far this year there has been 48 actual fires with a loss of $25,600.00. Last year's loss would have run about the same as this year's, had it not been for the Turnbull Company fire which did destruction to the amount of 84,000.00 and the Salvation Army fire which destroyed property valued at $40,-000.00.

Chimney fires cause more alarms than all the other kind of fires put together. Although they are not a dangerous fire they cause the firemen many a cold trip in the winter time last year 237 alarms sent in for chimney fires were answered while for the eleven months this year there have been 194 chimney fires Of the twelve calls for fires out of the city this year, four have been answered.

The firemen were let off light this summer with grass fires there being only three, compared with 17 in the summer of 1923.

This report shows that the loss by fires this year is comparatively low and that so far this year the city has been free from any large fires.

WESTERN CHAMPS TO STAY AT HOME

Will Not Come East in Quest of Dominion Honors This Year.

WINNIPEG, December 1. — The Winnipeg Victorias, the Western Canada football champions, will not go east in quest of Dominion honours this season.

This was definitely decided at a special meeting of the club last night when certain complications in the arrangements forced the Bisons to cancel their trip.

The decision was arrived at after a long conference of the club. There was dissension in the ranks owing to the railway problem. The majority of the team wanted to go over one railway, while the officials were bent on going over the other. The players decided to go on their own accord, but the officials stepped in and prevented them from going as the Victoria Club.

The decision was a sore blow to the men who have been training faithfully in an effort to put up a good showing. It will be recalled that similar conditions arose with regard to the route of the Regina team, the western champions of 1923, and the trip was almost abandoned.

THE THIEF OF BAGDAD

BY ACHMED ABDULLAH

Was it his imagination?

He decided to find out. He stopped dead in his tracks, and stared straight and hard at an enormous cluster of purple orchids spotted with pawny orange a few feet away from him, at the exact height of his eyes. Never for a second looking away, he walked on. Swiftly he walked, with a full, free swing of arms and hips. He ran, faster and faster and faster; and—yes, there was no doubt of it—the cluster of orchids remained where it was, in front of his eyes; the whole Enchanted Garden was keeping step with him.

Again he stopped. He scratched his head, deliberating what he had better do. He repeated the experiment with the same result. Once more the garden moved in a parallel line with him.

"Allah!" he exclaimed. "What miracle be this?"

The next moment, as if in answer, he heard mocking, ironic laughter issue from a gnarled tamala tree. The tree laughed so heartily that its long beard of grey moss shook and its leaves trembled and danced, while all the other trees, allthe flowers and bushes and blades of grass took up the laughter in a mad, whirling chorus.

The merry sounds flowed on, pouring about Ahmed's ears like the murmur of a stream through summer fields; and, as he shook his head, wondering what to do, the tamala tree which had laughed first spoke words—in excellent, fluent Arabic with hardly a trace of foreign accent:

"Ah—my Ahmed! Ah—my clever, clever Thief of Bagdad! let us see if your wisdom be as vast as ours and your wit as sharp as ours. Let us see if you will be able to solve the secret of the Enchanted Garden. How, my darling Ahmed, are you going to get out of here? Tell me! Tell me!" And again the tree laughed loudly and mockingly: "Ho—ho—ho!"

"Ho—ho—ho!" echoed the Enchanted Garden.

Almost at once, quickly as the shadow of a leaf through summer dusk, an idea came to Ahmed.

For let us recall that, born and bred in Bagdad's coiling streets, having made his living in bazaar and marketplace as one of the foremost members of Bagdad's Ancient and Honorable Guild of Thieves, he had learned there many subtle skills and twists of brain, had learned to be gliding of thought and tongue so as to find a shift with any man's wiles.

Years ago, when Bird-of-Evil had been the master thief and he a mere beginner, the other had taught him that in a tight corner silence was the sharpest weapon in the world, and that the listener has all the advantage over the talker. For the more the latter speaks, the more he becomes involved and tangled in his own web of words and the more anxious he grows to receive an answer, be it in agreement or in contradiction from the other; until finally, should the listener, in spite of all provocation, keep his tongue between his teeth, the talker is liable to lose his patience and to blurt out the very things he meant to conceal: valuable secret or gossip or information.

Ahmed smiled as he decided to put his friend's theory into practice. His first surprise over, he made believe that he was not at all aware of the tree's laughter and mocking words. He yawned elaborately, stretched his arms as if he were tired with walking, and sat down in the shade of the loquacious tree, leaning against the trunk, while above him the tree continued to jabber and jeer and blabber like an old spinster cackling over the cook pots.

"How are you going to get out of here?" demanded the tree.

No answer. Only a loud, rude yawn.

"Ho—ho!" sneered the tree. "You may have to live forever in this garden until your beard sprouts, young man, and grows to be as long as this moss of mine!"

Still no answer. Once more Ahmed yawned; blinked his eyes sleepily.

"Thief!" exclaimed the tree.

"Thief of Bagdad! Are you listening to me?" And, a little more impatiently: "Ahmed! Answer me! Are you listening?" And, still more impatiently, with a slight growl of anger that caused his back to wriggle like the hide of an old elephant: "Are you deaf? Answer me! I demand an answer!"

Ahmed rubbed his eyes. Then he whistled to himself, softly, negligently, while the tree began to shake with rage, to stammer and stutter:

"Behold me this fool! This idiot! This half-wit! A clever man, he calls himself! He boasts of it! And there he sits, silent, deaf, dumb! By Allah! A fool indeed! The sort of fool who fasts for a whole year—and then breaks his fast with an onion!"

Still Ahmed kept as silent as the desert at noon, thinking to himself: "Expect good from the wicked; drain the swallow's milk; pluck a hog's wool; cause the sand to yield pomegranates; fix a pump in the middle of the sea; put a male elephant in the nest of a humming-bird—then make the silent talk!" Until the tree, utterly exasperated, broke into a perfect storm of hysterical vituperations, cursing Ahmed's ancestors for seven generations, cursing his problematical descendants, and winding up with:

"An Arab he calls himself! But I think he lies! He cannot understand the Prophet's language! He is a Jew! A Christian! Perhaps a Chinese! Or a woolly-haired, thin-shanked one from Africa! Deaf he is, and dumb! Why—even if I told him right now that, to get out of the Enchanted Garden, all he has to do is to pronounce three times the name of Allah and touch the little brown spot on my green trunk which conceals my heart with the second finger of his left hand—even then he would not understand—the fool the idiot—the half-wit—the dunce—the dolt! Brothers and sisters!"—addressing the whole garden—"I am afraid that this Ahmed will have to stay here until he dies! And what a dreadful bore that will be for the lot of us!"

He looked for the brown spot on the trunk, found it, and touched it with the second finger of his left hand, while three times he pronounced the Creator's name. Then, at once, the tree seemed to change its shape. The foliage dropped away as did the bark; and instead of a tree stood a very old man, with long, green hair, a long green beard, green eyes, green skin. His very toe nails were green, and green was his voice—if voice can be said to have a color—as he said to Ahmed:

"Fool you may be, but I am the greater fool. For you fooled me to the Sultan's taste with your cursed silence. See"—he pointed at the Enchanted Garden and at an opening in its wall of trees beyond which was a sun-bathed clearing—"you have broken the spell. The road is yonder—the road down which you must step on your search for happiness!"

"Shall I find the silver chest on this road, the magic chest, the greatest treasure on earth?"

"I am not sure," replied the tree-man. "You have done well so far. You have conquered your pride, your envy, and your jealousy. You have shown courage. You have accepted the blessed faith of the Prophet Mohammed—on Him the salute! And—" with a rather self-conscious laugh—"I personally can testify to your wisdom and wit. But I cannot tell you a thing about the silver chest. You will have to ask the Old Man of the Midnight Sea."

"Where does he live?"

"Over there!" The other pointed vaguely to the East and, before Ahmed could ask another question, he changed back into a tree—a very silent tree this time, just as maddeningly silent as the Thief of Bagdad had been a few minutes before.

So Ahmed went on his way, meeting with various incredible adventures, until finally he met the Old Man of the Midnight Sea—"The Sea of Resignation to Fate," as the ancient Arab chronicle interprets it.

But speaking about Resignation to Fate, here was one virtue in which the Prince of Mongols was decidedly lacking.

"I am my own Fate!" he used to exclaim; and, at least where the Princess Zobeid was concerned, he tried his best to make this boast come true.

For by this time, travelling down the great Central Asian overland road in the guise of peaceful merchants, the pick of his Tartar, Manchu and Mongol fighting-men had entered Bagdad. They had taken up their living quarters in various caravanserais within easy reach of the Caliph's palace in case of sudden mobilization and attack. During the day they squatted in their bazaar booths, exchanging the mellow produce of the Far East for Arabistan's silks and scents and forged steel; in the evening they met in a deserted cemetery outside of Bagdad's walls, where Wong K'ai, the Mongol Prince's confidential adviser who had remained behind, supervised their drill by their red-faced, silver-capped war captains.

Too, the spies who had watched the Prince of Persia and the Prince India had made report to their master who was now on his way to the mysterious and most extraordinary Island of Wak, so called for a reason lost in the mists of antiquity—a reason to which even that grandiose and ponderous Mandarin classic, "The Book of the Yellow Emperor," gives not the slightest clue.

The Prince and his retinue took ship from the Manchurian coast. Came two days' pitching and rolling and, if the truth be told, sea-sickness, as the ship bored through the turbulent grey-green channel. Then one morning the sun rose in the East behind lowering clouds that were like mountains of gold-glowing lava. There was a gossamer fog which lifted suddenly, and minute by minute the Island of Wak peaked more sharply into the focus. Nearer and nearer it came until the Prince of the Mongols, seated on top deck, could see all the details.

Seen from the distance, the place looked like some delicate and exquisite Chinese painting drawn and brushed by a master-craftsman of the Ming dynasty. There were charming pagodas, tinkling with silver and porcelain bells; quivering bamboos; towering pine trees; waters eddying round a tangle of tall reeds; narrow rivers spanned by audaciously curved bridges. There were vivid bits of life: a peasant tilling his small patch of soil; a maiden sitting in a garden and weaving brocade at the loom; a scholar in front of his house, pouring over a learned scroll; an old man bearing a great bundle of fire wood; a fisherman rocking in his skiff—and, hovering over all, the serenity of quiet, intense, never-tiring labor which is the message and the blessing of the Chinese.

For Wak had been colonized by the Chinese. After the manner of their race, not through the sword, but through work and industry, they had vanquished the original inhabitants: Tunguz tribesmen. The latter had died. To-day there was only one of them left—Yuqluq—the medicine-man to whom the Prince had sent word of his coming and who even now was climbing up the ship's ladder.

The Prince gave a little exclamation of disgust when he saw the medicineman. For Yuqluq looked like a savage. He was tall and thin and dark. His hair, dyed red with henna, had been carefully trained in the shape of an immense helmet, and was ornamented with antelope horns. From his shoulders floated a magnificent cape of hawks' feathers. He wore many-coiled brass-wife anklets which reached from his feet to his knees, and broad brass bracelets on both his forearms. His naked body was smeared with a bizarre design of ochre and crimson clay, while his face was tattooed to resemble a devil mask. Innumerable necklaces of beads were strung around his throat. From his girdle hung a large collection of witch charms, which flittered and rattled with every gesture and movement; and, dangling from a tall stick in his right hand, was something which resembled a dried cocoanut, but which on closer inspection turned out to be a human head, carefully smoke-cured, preserved, and shrivelled, after the bones had been removed.

An unsavoury savage. But there was something ominous, something wildly superb in the poise of his tall body. And a few moments later it appeared that, whatever the outer man, the inner man was both shrewd and fearless.

"I heard word, Yuqluq," said the Prince, "of a certain dread fruit which you possess—a fruit which holds instantaneous power over life and death."

"You have been truly told," replied the medicine-man.

"I want this fruit. Bring it."

"No!"

"No . . . ?" The Prince raised an eyebrow. "You mean—you refuse to obey?"

"Exactly!" Yuqluq crossed his arms over his broad chest.

"You realize," purred the Prince, "what refusal means?"

"Death!"

"Indeed, dog! But—ah"—with a thin, cruel smile—"slow death—death both lengthy and humorous! Humorous—I mean—from the onlooker's point of view."

"I am not afraid of death. Nor am I afraid of tortures."

Both men were silent. They stared at each other, like two fencers. Finally, the Prince inclined his head.

"You spoke the truth," he said. "You are not afraid. To kill you would be useless. To torture you would be a waste of time. On the other hand, I want the magic fruit. I need it. I intend to have it. Tell me—how much do you want?"

"The fruit is not for sale. Gold is of no value to me."

"I shall make you Duke of Wak."

"I do not care for titles. I"—Yuqluq drew himself proudly—"I am a medicine-man! What greater title is there?"

"Mine own—possibly," smiled the Prince.

"Possibly!" came the arrogant rejoinder.

The Prince laughed.

"By the Buddha!" he said. "I like you!"

"And I like you, O Majesty!"

And both men meant it. Both men laughed.

"You might give me the fruit for love of me?" suggested the Mongol.

"I do not love you enough—for that."

"Then—how can I pay you? What can I do for you? All men have their price. What is yours? What do you want?"

"I want a wife," came Yuqluq's simple reply. "I want children—preferably men-children. For I am the last of my race. With me—unless I have children—the Tunguz nation is finished."

"Well—then—why don't you get married?"

"There is no Tunguz woman left in all the world."

"Marry a Chinese girl. Some of them are quite pretty—and all of them are obedient."

The medicine-man's eyes flashed with hate.

"These Chinese pigs look down on me," he said. "They will not give me one of their women in marriage."

"I shall give orders. You will have a dozen Chinese wives if you like."

"Majesty," replied Yuqluq, "it would do no good. You can order—yes—and they will obey. But they will treat me as they have always done, and my wife, though of their own blood, will be an outcast amongst them."

"What can we do?" puzzled the Prince.

"There is only one way."

"Name it!"

"You are the Great Lord, the Great Dragon, the Supreme and Exquisite Majesty! If one of your own blood should become my wife, even the proudest of these Chinese pigs will kowtow to me and kiss my feet!"

The Prince of the Mongols was silent. He was not angry at the other's demands. Why—he smiled thinly—his father had been a much-married potentate. Twelve wives he had; seventeen sons and nine daughters. He himself—"for reasons of peace and political unity," as he expressed it—had had his brothers beheaded when he had mounted the throne. But he had permitted his sisters to survive. For they were valuable pawns, articles of political trade, to be given as wives to chiefs and khans and minor princelings who desired the shining glory of imperial connection. And right here was a case in point!

He turned to the medicine-man.

"My youngest sister will make you an excellent wife," he said, "and you will doubtless make me an excellent brother-in-law—ah—a generous brother-in-law."

"Yes," smiled Yuqluq. "Within the hour I will bring you the magic fruit of life and death."

"Harmonious and exquisite thanks!" They went ashore.

A few miles inland were vast ruins where once, before the peaceful Chinese invasion, had stood the main temple—rather a cluster of temples—of the Tunguz tribesmen. The ruins' sinister reputation was such that the very Chinese, most practical and irreligious of men, refused to convert the acres into fields or building-sites, and even to set foot on them.

Following Yuqluq, the Prince of the Mongols picked his way carefully down; for there were large cracks and fissures between the marble steps where fig and banyan seeds had found foothold amongst the slabs and, through the centuries, had grown into huge, gnarled trees that heaved the stone work apart like so much sand a child piles up at play.

"Careful!" admonished Yuqluq. "Step gently. For the snake folk live here in peace."

The very next moment a low, thick, unmistakable hiss came almost directly from beneath the Prince's feet. At once his sword flashed free and descended with a steely swish. The head of the snake landed on a flat rock to the left with a dull thud.

In the middle of the ruins there had once been an artificial lake dammed by stone embankments. But the dams had shivered and burst. The lake had risen. In the lower dip of the valley, scarlet-necked cranes had their homes in the half submerged arcades of the temples while blunt-nosed, pig-eyed crocodiles nuzzled the carved, broken pillars.

They walked up a steep street where wild peacocks strutted proudly on the shivered house tops, spreading their tails under the golden splendor of the sun, and where countless blue pigeons with yellow topknots whirred and cooed. A little mongoose sat in the empty window of a deserted house, staring at them, and scratching its tiny, furry ears.

It seemed that here, in the city of the dead Tunguz race, the world had stood still, that it was still standing still to hear the centuries race past on dusty, purposeless wings.

On they walked, past deserted pavilions, past broken screens of fretted pink and green marble, half buried in the dirt, past brass-studded gates whose hinges were eaten out out with rust, past walls plumed and choked with grass, past little shrines which were gems of tracery and inlay, past masses of luxuriant plant life. For trees were everywhere. They grew between the square, massive stones of the pavement, splitting them open like ripe cocoanuts.

"We have arrived," he said. "Here my ancestors, before they were drowned in the swill of these Chinese pigs, prayed to their gods and brewed their ancient craft. Here I, the last of my race, having inherited the craft of my ancestors, fashioned with my own hands and brain and soul the magic fruit which kills—and which grants life. No"—as the Mongol Prince was about to follow him across the threshold—"wait here. It is not safe inside."

He entered the temple and returned a few minutes later, carrying tied to a long bamboo pole, a small object.

"I give it to you, Majesty," he said solemnly. "May it mean death to your enemies! May it mean life again—renewed life springing from my loins—to my race when your sister, my future wife, shall bear me children! May they be men-children! May they be as many as there are hairs on my head!"

The Prince of the Mongols took the pole and looked at the magic fruit. It was round, the size and shape of an apple, but made of a substance which he did not recognize, combining the shimmer and glistle of polished gold, the soft texture of Mandarin velvet, and the icy chill of frozen snow. Its color was of mingled milk flames beneath the golden shimmer, and it exhaled a strong, cloying scent.

"How do I use it?" asked the Prince.

Then the medicine-man showed him that on one side of the apple was a tiny green point, like the point of a needle, and on the other side a similar point, but purple in color.

"The green point . . . When green poin when it scratches the skin with a Me touch of the purple point, applied with the same motion, means life."

"Life"—demanded the Prince—"to whoever has died—and of whatever causes?"

"No. It cannot restore life to those who have died by the sword, by wounds, or mutilations. But it does give life to those who have died of an ailment or of poison—any poison at all—or by the touch and scratch of the apple's green point. Come!" laughed the medicine-man. "Let us put this darling little apple to the test!"

They left the ruins and returned to the harbor where, at the water's edge, a Chinese was fishing. The man was intent upon his catch. He did not hear the footsteps behind him, nor the Prince's whisper:

"Here is your chance, Yuqluq!"

The latter moved noiselessly toward the fisherman; he reached out with the pole and, quickly, suddenly, touched and scratched the man's naked shoulder with the green point of the magic fruit.

The Chinese felt the scratch; imagined that a mosquito had bitten him; raised his hand to slap it away. Then, with his hand still in mid-air, he dropped as if struck by lightning. He lay there, stark, stiff, lifeless, while, gradually, as the Prince of the Mongols looked on, the body became bloated and turned a terrible, grey-green color, as though he had been killed by bubonic plague.

"Not yet!" laughed Yuqluq.

Again he reached out with the pole; again scratched the fisherman's shoulder, but this time with the purple point. And at once the grey-green color of the shin changed to a healthy, ruddy flush, the bloated body assumed its ordinary proportions, and the man sat up nowise hurt, except for a great fear which had swept over his soul which caused him to run away as fast as his legs would carry him.

"The greatest rarity in the world," admitted the Prince of Mongols, "There is no doubt of it. More precious that the Prince of Persia's flying carpet, more marvellous than the Indian's crystal! And yet . . ." he slurred; paused.

"And yet—what?" asked the medicine-man.

"Will Zobeid think so?"

"How can she help herself, Majesty?"

There is beauty and romance in a rug that can cut through the air like a swallow; beauty and romance, too, in a crystal globe that mirrors the motley scenes of life. But is there beauty in this—a thing which gives life—yes—but which also gives death? Zobeid is a woman, soft-hearted. The thought of this grim thing might make her shudder. Perhaps she will fear and hate it—and fear and hate the giver."

"Decidedly," came Yuqluq's insolent answer. "It is lucky for you that I am going to be a member of your family. My brain will be of great help to you through the years to come. Majesty"—he lowered his voice—"use this magic apple!"

"Use it? What do you mean?"

"Send a confidential messenger to Bagdad as quickly as you can. Doubtless the Princess has amongst her servants one whose hand can be greased with gold?"

"Yes. There is Fount-in-the-Forest a Mongol slave girl who wishes me well."

"Good. Send her word to poison her mistress."

"Poison her?" Even the Prince's tough Mongol hide squirmed at the suggestion. "What for? What is a dead woman to me?"

Yuqluq smiled as he might at a babbling child.

"Have her poisoned slowly," he continued, "so that by the time you reach Bagdad she will be at every door of death. Then you, with the help of this magic apple, will bring her back to life. And there will be no argument as to which of the three of the Princes has brought back the greatest rarity. Life itself! Is there a finer gift on earth?"

The Prince laughed.

"Exquisite and harmonious thanks," he replied. "I am glad indeed to have you for a brother-in-law. Your time and talents are wasted in the Island of Wak. As soon as I return from Bagdad with my bride, I shall appoint you Chief Judge of the Imperial Circuit Court, Prime Minister, Moderator of the Buddhistic Faith, Supervisor of the Imperial Eunuchs, and a Knight Commander of the Order of the Five-Clawed Dragon."

That same afternoon a messenger was sent to Bagdad with the necessary instructions, while the Prince, with the rest of his retinue, returned to the mainland on the next day. They travelled quickly, by relays of horses and camels, toward the rendezvous with the other two Princes Terek-el-Bey. For it was now drawing close to the end of the fifth moon, and there was not much time to spare.

CHAPTER VIII.

Ahmed, too, was travelling swiftly; travelling East, always East, toward the rising sun of the world, the rising sun of his soul. The end of the fifth moon, he said to himself, and his goal was not yet in sight. His feet were stepping down the hard, long road. His soul followed where his feet led. Deep streams of longing swept over him as with the force of a great wind. A journey of the body, this; but also a journey of the spirit. Adventures of the body; but also high, clanking adventures of the spirit.

Farther and farther, each day, he drew away from the earth as he had known it heretofore; from life as he had lived it heretofore. Deeper and deeper he advanced into a gigantic, cosmic fairyland of which, gradually, he was beginning to feel the inner meaning of its symbolical expression and lessons and secrets. And yet, leaving behind him all formerly known and realized experiences, entering upon this vast and unknown realm of the spirit, he was conscious of a greater, subtler energy than he had ever known before; was commencing to see himself whole, measured against a more spacious scale of time—a scale of time where a month might be a fleeting, unimportant second, and a thousand years pass into the shadow like a single day.

Yet, straight through, the thought of Zobeid never left him. It was in his brain like a strange, wild ecstasy that suffused him utterly—like the sweet and facile running of a brook over a mountainside.

But—came the doubt—would he ever reach back to her?

Five months were already gone, never to be regained, and he was beginning to be afraid of Fate, to doubt the outcome; was longing for resignation.

Resignation to Fate!

And he remembered what the tree in the Enchanted Garden had told him: that he would have to consult the Old Man of the Midnight Sea the Sea of Resignation to Fate.

So he travelled on.

The valley below him was filled with mist. Above the mist, the sky vaulted tight and steel-blue, clear but for a cloud bank of a sickly, olive-green color that stretched across from North to South; stretched there like a solid obstacle, daring Ahmed to hurdle across and into the unknown. He half turned, looking over his shoulder. There, in back of him, the mountains rose and surged superbly. They sang there during the day, and at night whispered the praises of Allah to the hiving, green stars. On the other side of these mountains was life as he had lived it. He was going away from it now, into the unknown, the valley that, suffused with the sun's red and gold flames, turned radiant through its mist of running tints.

Something down there in that misty valley urged him on; it caught at his soul with a deep and puissant suction. He hurried—hurried toward the fringe of ultimate vision and understanding.

On the Swamp Road

An Adventurous Reporter Goes on the Trail of a Murderer—He Comes on Him Suddenly—The Murderer Is Armed and Powerful—Tempting Death Every Minute, the Reporter Works His Wits to Effect a Capture.

"Have y' seen the tracks?" she demanded. "I'll show 'em to y'. This way! This way!"

THE farmhouse had never been painted and was now black with age. To keep out the winter cold it was banked with dirt about the base. At one corner the spring rains, pouring down from a broken eaves-trough, had washed away the dirt embankments, disclosing the rotten ends of the perpendicular siding-boards. At the other corner of the north front was a gnarled honeysuckle vine, two thirds dead. Its spreading branches, leafless or bearing only scant and sickly verdure, clung to the warped sideboards like the gaunt arms of an old hag embracing the ruinous house. One grimy pane was broken out of the window in the west gable and the hole had been stuffed with rags.

For a long time debt and drink and sin had blasted this place, and now there was something else. Under the hot morning sun three women and two children stood in the bare dooryard, visibly huddling together, blanched and agape. They stared now at the house, now at the two empty automobiles standing by the roadside—one of them a long, grey, five-passenger car, the other a red two-passenger roadster. Sometimes, with an excess of horror, they looked over at a skinny old crone who hopped and peered about the two automobiles with an uncanny excitement. One of the children was a red-headed and freckled boy of ten, whose long legs protruded from frayed breeches that failed by some inches to reach his knobby knees. His mouth was open as though it had been frozen that way.

Coming out of the house, Skinner noticed this gaping boy first of all. In his rapid walk toward the red automobile he even looked around and noticed a bony horse standing with his head over the rickety barnyard fence and looking on as though it, too, were speculating upon what had happened. Then he saw the skinny crone behind his machine, watching him with snappy little eyes—as beady and nervous as those of a rat—and he apprehended at once that she burned with a gruesome excitement. Her snappy eyes watched his advance a moment; then she darted at him.

"Have y' seen the tracks?" she demanded. "I'll show 'em to y'. This way. This way." Her weazen hand clutched at his coatsleeve and she nodded her old head at him.

The Long Gray Car

SKINNER thought of an unclean old bird as she bobbed along the roadside—keeping a little in advance of him in her febrile eagerness. At the lilac thicket she halted, stooping and pointing her lean arm and extended index finger in a rigid line. The tracks of an automobile showed plainly on the grass there. At a glance Skinner saw that a machine had drawn up in the cover of the lilac thicket, then backed away to turn around.

"He turned it around," said the crone, her beady eyes snapping at Skinner. "See yere!" Stooping, with her arm and forefinger extended, she followed the curving track which the machine had made in backing and turning.

"Backed plumb into that!" she said, triumphantly, and even before she pointed to them. Skinner noticed that twigs and branches of the young tree were broken. He reached up and picked a thread of black cloth from a broken branch. Plainly the top of the car had been up and the collision with the tree had torn it.

"Backed plumb around! Plumb around!" she said, and swung her skinny old arms in a half circle as though she were swinging the car around. "Plumb around!" she repeated, repeating the gesture also. Skinner found it peculiarly gruesome.

In following the long grey car out from town he had taken most of the curves on two wheels at risk of his neck. Even now, after ten minutes spent in the farmhouse, the deed had only just accomplished itself. It was so recent that it still oozed and quivered under the bright morning sun.

That came to him as he drove away, and he shuddered. Partly from a mere instinct of flight, he jammed his foot savagely against the accelerator. But there was a professional reason for speed, too; and as the little red car leaped away his shocked brain began composing the story as it would appear in the extra. It would be the first extra Allentown had ever experienced, and he wondered how much of a hit that metropolitan touch would make.

Reporter in a Hurry

A WIRY and undersized man was Skinner, tanned a good leathery brown. There were a few grey hairs in his bristling, intractable mustache, and his gray eyes studied the backreeling road through a pair of round, gold-bowed spectacles. A faded cloth hat was jammed down on his solid head. He wore a limp shirt, with a rusty little tie under the limp turn-down collar and an office-stained alpaca jacket over that. Manifold adventures had enriched him little, except in experience; but as usual he was quite boyishly eager over this new adventure of the Allentown Gazette.

A quick side glance showed that the speedometer was registering thirty-five miles an hour, and when he looked back to the road two galloping horsemen had popped up out of the ground. He recognized the grizzly-bearded one on the left and nodded, as he flashed past—with a grim little smile, for the man was carrying a repeating shotgun, and Skinner approved of that. Under certain circumstances buckshot was very effective.

Two minutes later he slowed up with a frown. Coming out, he had simply trailed the grey car over an unknown road. He knew the general direction, of course; but just ahead a road branched to the left. Should he turn there? By general direction it ought to be his way. There was no one in sight to ask; but, in any event, it could hardly take him far out. He swung into the left branch and jammed down the accelerator again. It was very good going until he passed a small white farmhouse; then the gravel ceased and it became a dirt road.

In a few minutes the ground sloped down and the dirt road resolved itself into a rutty wagon track. The road grew worse. Overhanging bushes on both sides lashed the churning car. The heat and the dank smell became stronger. Obviously, he was in a swamp. Now and then through the bushes, in fact, he could see where a ditch had been run on both sides of the road in some long-abandoned attempt at drainage. It was impossible to turn here. The prospect of backing up a mile through that tortuous rutty road was not inviting. He pushed on, hoping to come either to a better road or at least into a space where he could turn around. So far the road had been dry and baked hard as iron. Now it dropped into lush ground that yielded spongily and with a squashy sound under the wheels. Three rods ahead the miserable road curved out of sight beneath overhanging bushes.

A Startling Apparition

WITH a bitter thought that the road couldn't be worse, he shifted into low gear, churned through the screen of overhanging bushes at the curve and almost immediately stopped the car, every nerve in his body tingling.

A rod ahead of him the road was blocked by an automobile with the top up. The back of the car was scratched and the top torn in half a dozen places. Gaping at this apparition, Skinner's first thought—which came with a deep pang—was that he had no weapon. His second thought, which came fast on the heels of the first, was to shift the driving lever into reverse position for backing. He was doing that when a man stepped out of the bushes and laid a right hand on the foredoor of the car as though he were taking possession of it. "Git out!" said the man.

He was a burly person, with broad shoulders and a deep chest. Although he wore a loose, faded grey coat, one might see that his waist—encircled by a rusty leather belt that held up his frayed trousers—was smaller than his chest. He had lean loins, and in comparison with the mighty chest his legs looked almost spindling. His collarless calico shirt was open at the throat, showing a hairy chest and the base of a thick neck.

In other circumstances, Skinner might have admired his figure and guessed that he was a prize-fighter. Just now he could see scarcely anything except the man's face and a foot from his own. It was a swarthy animal face and there was a peculiar meaning upon it—in the cat eyes that glittered into Skinner's and on the lips that made a straight line which was bisected by a diagonal white scar. That diagonal scar across the long, straight line of the lips seemed to belong to the face like a natural feature of it.

That is what Skinner noticed—and the pockets in the man's loose, faded grey coat. The man's hand was thrust into the left pocket, where it grasped an automatic revolver. From the gaping right-hand pocket a hammer protruded. It was clear to Skinner that on the approach of his noisy car the man had taken that hammer out of the tool kit of the stalled car and put it in his right-hand coat-pocket as though he had an idea of using it, and that idea was implicit in the peculiar look on the man's swarthy face. Implicit in that look also were the things Skinner had seen in the weather-beaten farmhouse. They had been beaten with a hammer.

"Your Car Break Down?"

"GET out where?" said Skinner aimlessly, as these things swam through his mind.

There was no mistaking the cold ferocity with which the man replied, opening his lips just wide enough to emit the sounds: "Git out o' the car."

"Oh, sure!" Skinner replied cheerfully. "Devil of a road, ain't it?" He shut off the engine, threw the lever into neutral and set the hand brake—not pausing in the operations and certainly not hurrying. "Live around here?" he inquired cheerfully, as he slid nimbly along the seat and opened the foredoor on the other side.

Having put that little space between himself and the man, he paused with his hand on the open foredoor to add sociably, "I'm driving through from Indiana. Old woman at a log cabin back there told me to take the first turn to the left. Guess she thought she'd play a trick on me. Rottenest road I ever saw in my life.

"It's rotten luck, too," Skinner complained; "rotten luck." He stepped down to the weedy roadside, and continued: "I wanted to make a place they call Allentown by half past eight, sure. I'd like to wring that old scarecrow's neck for sending me off here!"

He was, of course, merely fighting for time and trying to think up something. "Your car break down?" he added neighborly, as he stepped over in front of the man and looked mildly up into his swarthy face.

By contrast his stature seemed that of a boy. As he looked into the sinister eyes, where a peculiar meaning lay, he felt to his marrow that there was going to be no delay, and he was inspired to say, with a confidential little smile and nod, "Fact is, I got into some trouble last night; been driving like the devil ever since ten o'clock. I guess they're after me." He thought the man's eyes wavered a hair's breadth, and he added, with another confidential little nod, "I shot a man. Can't we get out of this?"

Plainly, then, the man hesitated, with a slight scowl. "Know anything about a car?" he asked.

"You bet I do!" Skinner asserted confidently. "I was in that business once."

Skinner's Heart Fades

"IF you git my car to goin'," said the man in his peculiar manner of speaking, which was like a curse, "you can follow me out in your car." It was an offer—a promise, whatever that might be good for.

"Sure!" said Skinner cheerfully; "let's have a look at it." And lifting the hood to look at the engine he continued "Mighty good car, too. I know it like a book. Used to have the agency for it. Trouble is, it's too high-priced for farmers."

He must gain all the time he could—but not push it a second too far—for the minutes in which this man might hope to escape were running out. So far as his scant knowledge went the engine seemed sound.

Starting the stalled car might be as bad for him as failing to start it, for he had a leaden notion that once there was a clear way out of the swamp only one of them would ever take it. But he must do something.

By way of answer the man only gave a grim little nod and pulled a nickel-plated watch out of the small pocket in his frayed trousers, consulting it while Skinner's heart seemed to fade out of his body. Returning the watch to the pocket, the man looked at him—giving him, perhaps, three minutes; or was it only one?

Skinner climbed into the driver's seat. The man was about to follow him, but changed his mind and took a seat in the tonneau instead—that is, behind him.

With a dull, mechanical eye Skinner looked at throttle and spark lever; then turned the magneto key and put his hands to the wheel. He threw in the self-starter. It churned and the engine whirled, but no explosion came. He tried it again with the same result. Mechanically, he looked again at lever, spark, magneto key and at other equipment.

Playing For Time

THEN he saw, with astonishment, that the gasoline dial showed plainly that the tank was empty. Through his brain flitted the surprised and contemptuous thought, "Here's a man running for his life with an empty tank and not knowing it!" He was about to call out, with a touch of indignation, "Why, you're out of juice!" In fact, he half turned his head for that purpose. But immediately he looked back again; applied the self-starter twice more; then slipped quickly to the other end of the seat, saying: "It won't go!" at the same time springing from the car.

"I tell you what," he added, as the man was getting out of the car, "we've got to turn my car around and beat it back to the main road. It's the only way. You and I together can swing it around."

He supposed it was exactly what the man had in mind; but it would gain him three minutes—and his help in lifting the car around ought to be worth that little respite, especially as the man must turn the car before he could leave, unless he chose the slow and difficult process of backing up.

But Skinner walked ahead and so crossed over to the right-hand side of the road. Thus when they turned behind the car to lift it he would be at the man's left and his right hand would be close to the gaping pocket in which the automatic revolver lay. It was a desperate chance; but that was better than no chance at all. He kept talking. He was talking as they took positions behind the car, and he thought, "When we stoop I will grab for it."

But before they stooped the man very deliberately took the revolver out of his left-hand pocket and put it in the right-hand one, looking down into Skinner's eyes then with a tigerish little grin—as though some brute instinct had sensed a danger.

"Guess you'd like that gun," he suggested with a ghastly sort of grin. A horrible joke seemed stirring in his mind and Skinner suddenly smelled blood upon him. He must have grinned that way when he was at work back there on the main road.

The Stranger's Gun

"LOOK here!" said Skinner promptly, "I don't know who you are or what you're doing down here. But I know you want to get out. My name's Morrison and I'm from Shelbyville, Indiana. You'll read about me if you get an Indianapolis newspaper this morning. I've got to get out to have my neck. Now I know a way to get out and you don't. Listen to this: I came through a town called Turner Junction about an hour ago. I know a fellow there. He advised me to strike for a little flag station called Platburg and swing on a freight train there and so get up to Chicago. This red car of mine is pretty easy to follow and I knew I'd have to drop it pretty soon. He told me the road to Platburg—not used very much and most of the way through woods. I ought to have turned five miles back; but like a fool I decided to keep on to Allentown. The woods road looked sort of rough and I thought I could make Allentown and catch a passenger train. But it's too late for Allentown now. They'd be pretty sure to have word there before we could make it, and the passenger train would be gone. Platburg is the only chance I see and I know the way there. If anybody's looking for you," he added, his eyes steadily upon the man's, "it won't be long before they find that car, and this neighborhood won't be healthy."

As the man looked at Skinner an instant his glittering eyes seemed to beat in so that Skinner could fairly feel their impact upon his nerves.

"What makes you think somebody's looking for me?" he asked.

The man asked another question, his eyes boring into Skinner's head: "You come along that road?" He pointed south.

"Sure!" Skinner replied promptly.

"See anybody?" asked the man.

"Not a soul," said Skinner, "except the old woman at the log cabin that I told you about. She told me to turn here. You come with me and we'll make Platburg."

"All right," said the man grimly; and Skinner's constricted heart expanded exultantly.

Together they stooped to lift, and behind them—almost in their ears, it seemed—a voice shouted, "Hello!"

"They're After Me"

WITH the marvelous swiftness of a pouncing cat the man glanced over his shoulder, hurled Skinner to the ground, caught him by the throat and drew the hammer. It all happened while the shout was still ringing in Skinner's ears. He lay perfectly still, looking up through his gold-bowed spectacles at the burly form of death which knelt over him. He was not struggling in the least, either physically or mentally; but lying in a kind of quiet wonder, as though the mechanism of his life had been abruptly shut off, awaiting the blow. He saw that the man had turned his head again to look in the direction of the sound and noted the swelling vein on his thick neck.

Then another voice, some distance away, answered, "Hello, there!" The hand at Skinner's throat sensibly relaxed and the arrested mechanism started up again.

"Here's the track of a car!" called the first voice. "Hurry back to Tatroe's and telephone to watch the other end of the road. Then come back here. We'll follow the road through."

"I guess they're after me," Skinner whispered at random.

The man paid no attention to that. With one heavy hand resting on Skinner's chest at the base of the throat, he stretched his thick neck, turning his head from side to side, trying to make out the person who had shouted.

The man glowered dubiously down at him an instant and it seemed that the pupils of his eyes contracted.

"I killed three this morning," the man growled. "I'd as lief kill you as look at you." With that he got on his haunches and slowly raised himself, stretching his neck and peering. When he was upright he glowered down and motioned Skinner to rise. Two or three yards brought them to a place where, above the intervening bushes, Skinner could see the head and grey slouch hat of his grizzle-bearded friend.

"He's horseback and he's got a gun," the man mumbled in Skinner's ear as they crouched out of sight. "I could git him easy enough, but the horse'd git away."

He evidently revolved the problem which that presented, as his eyes turned restlessly up and down the road, and through the hand that rested on his back. Skinner could fairly feel the trembling and quivering of nerves and muscles as in a big animal that prepares to crouch for a spring. At the same time the man's sweat and odor, and the subtle feel of something obscene and bloody about him, were sickening.

"I'll Kill Him"

THE restless, glittering eyes came back to Skinner. "There's a bridle-patch back there a ways," he said. "I seen it when I drove down here."

"With a horse a felleh could follow that," the man added.

It seemed in fact the only outlet. With the telephoned alarm, their bad road would soon be blocked at both ends and for a man to make his painful way afoot across the swamp would take many hours. But with a horse one might follow the bridle-path to something that would give a chance of escape.

"I'll git him and you git his horse," said the man, grumbling under his breath; "and I'll give you a lift as far back as the bridle-path," he added with another little grin. Obviously the last was a lie, but Skinner was too much occupied with other things to pay attention to that.

"You'll lay down on your back with your hat over your face beside the bushes here and keep groanin'," the man explained. "I'll be in the bushes. He'll git off'n his horse to take a look at you and he'll put the bridle around his arm—see?" He made a motion like a horseman slipping a bridle over his arm. "When he squats down to take the hat off'n your face you reach up and grab the bridle." He nodded his head as though that were all; then added as a sort of elaboration, "I'll jump out the bushes and kill him."

It seemed to Skinner, in fact, horribly ingenious. He could fairly see the grizzle-bearded man dismounting, slipping the bridle over his arm and stooping with his shotgun tucked uselessly under his arm or laid upon the ground, and this other leaping from the bushes upon his bowed back.

"We ought to have some blood on the hat," he said stupidly. It was all he could think of.

The man nodded and drew a jackknife from his pocket. Skinner stupidly held out his arm and wondered dully how much blood-poisoning there might be in the blade which the man drew across it. He stared down at the red streak which broadened on his tanned arm, while the man caught the cloth from his head and dabbled the crown with red.

The Murderer's Plan

SKINNER took the hat, without bothering to put it on, and as he did so something that had been lying in reserve in his brain recurred to him in a flash.

"See here," he said, himself smearing the hat-crown against his arm, "we've got to make sure he does get off the horse, you see. He might just reach down with his gun and poke the hat off my face. Or he might wait till the other man comes back. We've got to make sure he gets off the horse," he repeated earnestly; "we must scatter some things around for him to get off and look at."

"I'll lie down beside the ditch there," Skinner went on, pointing to the side of the little clearing, "and you get in the bushes just behind me. I've got a leather wallet in my hip pocket. I'll spread that out beside the ditch as though somebody might have been going through it. And I've got some note paper in my pocket." He took from the pocket of his alpaca jacket a dozen sheets of memorandum paper and the stub of an editorial pencil that made a broad black mark,—things that he had hastily caught up from the desk when news of the murder came into the office. He exhibited them to his companion. "I'll fold over a sheet of this paper—see?—so it looks like the back of a big envelope, and I'll write my address on it. He'll want to see what's in it."

Writing rapidly on the folded sheet in a large hand he pronounced the words as he traced them: "Thomas Morrision, Shelbyville, Indiana, Lane County," while the man silently looked on.

Finishing the rapid writing, Skinner stepped excitedly down the road a few feet to the beginning of the little clearing and spoke breathlessly, for their business demanded haste: "He'll ride around this clump of bushes—see? I'll be lying in that narrow place between the bushes and the ditch, just on the edge of the ditch. He'll have to get off his horse to look these things over and he'll have to stay this side of the ditch. That'll bring him with his back to the bushes when he bends over. You'll be in the bushes."

The man surveyed the scene and nodded. Having dismounted at the spot to which Skinner pointed the stooping horseman's back would be only a foot from the bushes. Leap and blow of the hammer would do it easily.

Terrible Suspense

HAVING surveyed the scene the man's cat eyes turned to Skinner. He took the automatic revolver from his coat pocket, exhibiting it in his huge palm. "If you try a game you git this through the head," he said, parting the hard line of his lips just enough to emit sounds.

"Sure!" said Skinner, as though that were understood. He stepped forward to the spot he had indicated, tossed his open purse to the ground and laid the decoy envelope near it; then stretched himself on his back and looked up at the man.

The man stepped over him and thrust himself into the screen of bushes, squatting. Skinner could see him as he crouched, the automatic revolver in his left hand, carefully leveled at the prostrate head; the hammer grasped in his right hand.

Then Skinner, with his face toward the bushes, put the cloth hat over his head and cheek, spread his limbs as though he lay sprawling from a blow, and uttered a loud groan. An instant later he groaned again, louder yet, and the grizzle-bearded horseman shouted, "Hello, there!"

Twice again Skinner groaned and again the horseman, nearer at hand, called, "Hello, there!"

Another groan, an interval of silence; then the voice asked, "Are you hurt?" Evidently the rider had come to the edge of the clearing, in view of the prostrate body and paused there. But all Skinner could see, out of one eye under the hat-brim, was the little space directly in front of his head, the edge of the bushes and, through the leafage a bit of one knee of the crouching man. His heart fairly stopped beating and the hand that hung over the ditch-side clutched into the weeds. He gave a feeble moan and heard a horse's hoof sink squashily into the wet ground. The rider evidently was coming toward him and in another second would dismount, or else——

The Warning

SKINNER'S hand clutched tighter into the weeds and he held his breath. Then he heard a rustling and crackling of the thick bushes and he could see motion in those that were within his little field of vision as though a large object had been thrust against them. With all the agility of which he was capable, pulling himself by the hand clutched into the weeds, he rolled over into the ditch and as he went over he heard the grizzle-bearded man say, "Come out of that!"

When he sat up in the ditch the horse's forequarters were pressed into the brush. The grizzle-bearded rider was standing in the stirrups, the shotgun at his shoulder aiming downward, his finger on the trigger. Its muzzle was two feet above the head of the swarthy man who crouched there. To him the sudden leap of the spurred horse into the bushes had come like a flash of lightning of a clear sky.

A quarter of an hour later Skinner was explaining in gleeful excitement: "You see, his gasoline dial showed the tank was empty—plain as the nose on your face. It must have been almost empty when he drove up to the farm house— and his life depending upon his getaway. So I made up my mind he couldn't read and when it came right down to the pinch, I staked everything on that."

With a forefinger he affectionately tapped the sheet of memorandum paper which he had folded to look like a large envelope and superscribed before the swarthy man's eyes and then laid on the ground. The writing on it, arranged in the order of an address on an envelope was: "The Murderer, is in the bushes. At your left," and in the lower left-hand corner, where the name of a county is often put, "Look Out!" heavily underscored.

"But say," he added to the grizzle-bearded man, "I lost ten years' growth while I was lying there waiting to see whether you'd notice the envelope, or whether I'd have to shout to you and get a bullet through my head."

"He's horseback and he's got a gun," the man mumbled in Skinner's ear.

'Under-Water Eyes' Naval Invention

Submarines Would be Able to Detect Presence of Obstacles Without Periscopes

A YOUNG Italian scientist and naval expert, Prof. Leandro Guglielmotti of Civitavecchia, claims to have discovered a process which will overcome the law of refraction and enable people to see under water. The invention has special reference to submarines. Prof. Guglielmotti says:

"The first idea of this discovery came to me in 1916, when submarine warfare was at its height. I realized how helpless submarines become once they are totally submerged, and it occurred to me how greatly their naval and strategic power would be increased if only a means could be found to enable the crews to see under water. The law of the refraction of light presented an almost insuperable obstacle to this possibility, I had to call in the aid of another element, and after long study and patient research I devised a method by which a line of light could be made to pierce the water and at the same time be 'invisible to aircraft watching overhead."

Prof. Guglielmotti's apparatus, to be fitted to submarines, would, it is said, project shafts of invisible light through the water which would illuminate any body coming in the direction of their rays, it would act within a radius of from 700 to 900 feet, and at a depth of about fifty feet. Submarines would thus be able to detect the presence of obstacles even with their periscopes totally submerged.

So Obvious

THE young man had taken his old grandmother to a picture gallery. She had never been in such a place before, and accordingly she was very critical of all that she saw. Together they wandered round looking at the paintings with interest.

Finally they stopped before a canvas which showed a man seated in a high-backed chair. Tacked to the frame was a small white card.

"What does it say on the card?" asked the old lady.

"'A portrait of F. S. Jones, by himself,'" replied her grandson.

The old lady went closer to the picture.

"What folks these art people must be!" she muttered. "Any fool can see that the man is by himself, there's no one else in the picture!"—Answers.

Far Back

COUNSEL on both sides had been allowed fifteen minutes each for argument. Accordingly the counsel for the plaintiff took a long breath, puffed out his chest, and began: "At the fall of Babylon——"

"Just a minute," interposed the judge. "If you are going to start as far back as that, perhaps I had better allow you twenty minutes."—Tit-Bits

TIGER STUDENTS OUTPLAYED P.C.I. IN GROUP FINAL

EVEN ON LINE

Score of 39 to 1 Does Not Fairly Represent Peterboro's Share of Game.

Hamilton's fast backfield aided materially by Peterboro fumbles was too much for P.C.I. in the game at Hamilton Saturday and the garnet and gray were beaten 39-1, being eliminated from the Intersholastic race. The score, however, does not do justice to the hard fight put up by the losers who had much more of the play than the figures show.

They had the ball much of the time and their line work and plunging were better than that of the winners but the great speed and fine kicking ability of the Hamilton rear guard gave them the victory, especially as the Petes fumbled badly at times and had two kicks blocked each time a try resulting.

Hunter was the Hamilton star, his catching, running and kicking being of senior calibre. Small, the flying wing, did wonderful work on secondary defence, breaking up play after play. Morris was a resourceful quarter and Lawson an outside wing of great ability. All the backfield men had a burst of speed.

P.C.I fought all the way and the plunging of Rye and Bookhout, and the game work of Pogue at quarter and the tackling of Outram were features of their play.

Peterboro—Flying wing, Outram; halves, Cole, Cheu and Bookhout; quarter, Pogue; snap, Yelland; insides, Killaly and Craw; middles, Rye and Ebbs; outsides, Henry and Wood; subs., Amy, Fraser, Goheen, Morrison, Martyn and Neal.

Hamilton—Flying wing, Small; halves, Fitzpatrick, Hunter and Willard; quarter, Morris; snap, Wagel; insides, Parish and Stewart; middles, Hodd and Myers; outsides, Neill and Dawson; subs., Adams, Harley, Armstrong, Hawley, Parry and McIlroy.

Referee—Darcy Smith, Toronto. Umpire—E. Broderick, Toronto.

H.C.I. Scored Early.

The winners started scoring early. They worked a short kickoff, recovering the ball and on the third down Hunter tried a field goal and got a rouge.

Peterboro gained eight yards on two downs but on the third down Meyers broke through and blocked Cole's kick, picked up the ball, carried it to Peterboro's line and when tackled passed to Lawson who scored a try. It was not converted.

Hamilton ran the kick-off back to centre and Small went round the short end for 40-yards. On the next down on an extension run, Fitzpatrick went over for a touchdown which Hodd converted.

P.C.I. rallied and for the next ten minutes forced the play by good plunging but they failed to score, Hunter saving a point once by a good run. Finally Cole fumbled a punt and Hamilton were on the attack again, Hunter kicking into touch-in-goal for a point.

Early in the second quarter P.C.I. made some nice gains on plunges but they went for nothing in the face of the good work of the Hamilton back division. Finally another blocked kick on Cole gave Morris a chance to get over for a try, Hodd converting.

Soon after a fumble gave Hamilton th ball at Peterboro's thirty-five-yard line and Small dropped a goal from the field.

Harley returned the kick-off to Bookhout who fumbled and Hamilton got the ball. Morris bucking over for a try which was not converted. Half time score—27-0.

Third Period.

In the third period Hamilton pressed and eventually Harley went over for a try on an extension run. It was not converted. Soon after Small got a rouge in attempting to drop a goal.

Early in the last quarter Hodd kicked over for a try which he converted making the score 39-0.

GAMBLING DEVICES AT FAIRS EXPELLED

Prizes of Small Articles of Merchandise to be Allowed.

TORONTO, Dec. 1.—(Canadian Press.)—Setting their fairs decidedly against invasion of Canadian exhibitions by gambling devices, members of the Canadian Association of Exhibitions yesterday adopted a resolution providing that any member of the association permitting concessions in which money are given out shall be immediately expelled.

The adoption of a resolution follows the conferences held last week in Ottawa between executive of the association and ministers of justice and of agriculture, at which it was urged that some revision of the statutes be made to place fairs on parity with church bazaars and socials. It was held by the association that ordinary concessions in which small articles of merchandise were used as prizes were perfectly harmless; perfectly harmless!

QUEENS SECONDS WIN

Defeated C.N.R. of Montreal in Intermediate Semi-Final.

KINGSTON, Dec. 1.—Queens qualified to meet the O.R.F.U. winner for the dominion intermediate rugby championship here Saturday, when they defeated C.N.R. of Montreal by a score of 25 to 14. The winners had the best of the play, and deserved to win. The Queen's line was exceptionaly strong, and the C.N.R. players were unable to get through the line when scores were needed. In the third period C.N.R. staged a great comeback, and scored a touch which was converted after Voss fumbled a kick from Burnham. Norrie, McCrimmen, Voss and Ada were the stars for the winners.

QUEENS DEFEAT O.R.F.U. WINNERS

SCORE WAS 11-3

VARSITY STADIUM, Dec. 1.—Queens defeated Balmy Beach here Saturday before 8,000 spectators by 11 to 3, thereby qualifying to play Winnipeg Victorias in the final for the Canadian championship next Saturday. Balmy Beach, though defeated gave the champions a hard battle and provided a much more interesting game than the Tigers did a week ago. A blocked kick in the third period gave Queens a touchdown which practically settled the game. The Beach backfield caught well, but did little or no passing. Their tackling was first-class and they broke up Queens trick plays with great regularity.

Hughes and Leadley had an interesting kicking duel and the Toronto man did not suffer in comparison with the Queens star. "Red" Batstone twisted his ankle just before half time and did not play at all in the second half, but Queens did not suffer as Chantler, who replaced him, played brilliantly. Queens showed more aptitude recovering loose balls, else there would have been a different story to tell.

CROCKS DEFEATED YOUNG BLOODS

What About a Second Division Team Next Year?

The De Laval Football Club had their first practice game of the season on Saturday, when the young bloods fell before the old crocks to the tune of 4-2. Bill Edwards showed much of his old Dundee form (until the second half) and along with A. Hunter, stood out on the forward line. Hunter accounted for one of the goals, after a fine basketball movement. Bill McGee at centre half distributed the ball well to his wing and was equally well supported by Danny Campbell at left half. The Crocks uncovered a fine young back in A. Pickles, and he, along with W. Pulley in goal, made a strong defence.

The winners were by far the better team and, if there are not too mank broken crocks to-day, things look bright for a fine noon hour league this winter. Ward and G. Coleman were fortunate to score for the losers.

Mr. J. Ashmore made an efficient referee.

Old Crocks—W. Pulley, Pickles, Walker, McKee, Campbell, Cutmore, Edwards, Dyer, Abraham, Hunter.

WOODEN SPOONS.

Wooden spoons are best for stirring and mixing. A wooden knife and fork for serving salads is also advisable.

CANADIENS WIN FROM ST. PATS

SCORE WAS 7 TO 1

MONTREAL, Dec. 1.—(Canadian Press).—Indications that the Canadiens are going to make a strong bid to retain the Stanley Cup and world's professional hockey honors were manifest Saturday night when they overwhelmed the Toronto St. Patricks 7 to 1. The game was the first scheduled feature of the National Hockey League's augumented season and served as the curtain raiser for the formal opening of the Forum, Montreal's new $100,000 artificial ice rink. The double attraction of a new rink and an inaugural game of a new campaign attracted 9,000 fans, the crowd being the largest that ever witnessed an ice hockey tussle here.

Canadiens started to take command immediately the game started and within 55 seconds Billy Boucher scored the first of the many goals, repeating in a little over five minutes to end the scoring of the first period. His first goal was on a pass from Sprague Cleghorn, while his second was a smart piece of work on a rebound after Morenz shot.

His third goal early in the second period was also a quick flip of the puck, which caught Roach prone on the ice after Morenz had sent a hard drive at the Toronto goalie.

Adams scored Toronto's lone tally from outside the defence and from Canadiens, with Sprague Cleghorn featuring in three rushes that resulted in goals by Joliat and Morenz.

Probably the most spectacular count of the evening and certainly the one most applauded was scored by Mantha, substitute Canadien defence player, who went through the entire St. Pat's team after halting a rush and beat Roach.

ARMY BEAT NAVY.

BALTIMORE, Md., Dec. 1.—A barrage of dropkicks, fired from the magic toe of Captain Edward W. Garbisch, broke down the navy's fighting defense Saturday and gave the Army a spectacular victory, over her ancient service foe.

Rising to super-heights in the climax to his long and brilliant gridiron career, Garbisch picked four field goals that represented the entire margin of army's 12 to 0 triumph in a thrilling, desperately fought struggle, before President Coolidge, and a vast throng of 78000 in Baltimore Stadium.

Garbisch by kicking four field goals, not only performed a feat that has no parallel in the army-heavy history but throughout the game was an outstanding figure, both on attack and defense, and in triumph that broke a two-year deadlock in the service rivalry and gave the cadets the lead in the series that was inaugurataed in 1890. As a result army now has 13 victories to her credit and navy 12, while two battles resulted in ties.

FABLES ON HEALTH

"Do's are generally more effective than "don'ts", so Mrs. Mann of Anytown had learned in bringing up her family of youngsters.

Of course she was, like most people, inclined to shout "don't" at one of the children, as often as not. But on the whole she had found that if they were properly instructed in what to do the chances were that sooner of later they would not have to be corrected so frequently.

But there are a few little health don'ts that parents should enforce with considerable rigidity. Among them are these:

Don't breathe through the mouth. Enlarged tonsils and respiratory troubles will result.

Don't overeat.

Don't sit all bent up and stooped in your chair.

Don't neglect to brush your teeth, keep the mouth well washed out and to bathe frequently.

WINNIPEG WILL BATTLE QUEENS

ARE NOT FLASHY

WINNIPEG, Dec. 1.—With a record that gives them undisputed right to the Western Canada rugby championship, the Winnipeg Victorias will leave for Toronto Tuesday to tackle the Queen's Nonpareils or Balmy Beach in the Canadian final next Saturday.

The East, and many in the West, are of the opinion that the Vics. are foolish to go east in quest of the Dominion honors in view of the severe beating suffered by Western champions during the past few years. But the local team does not see it in the same light and the boys believe they will surprise the country with the showing they will put up. They have been training faithfully, and if condition means anything they will prove a surprise package.

David and Goliath.

Winnipeg fans hope the final will prove a case of David and Goliath. The Vics. are not hailed as a super team, but they have established a great record in rugby in Manitoba. This season they have gone through without losing a game. In fact, as far as Manitoba is concerned the Bisons have not dropped a game since 1919, though this is the first season they have been successful in the Western finals.

Good Back Field.

The Winnipeggers have a strong line and a strong back division, with Greig Warren, a real star in any league, at centre half. Warren was kept out of the Western semi-finals and finals with an injured leg, but he has recovered and will perform in the final. It was the loss of Warren that proved the Vics. have strong substitutes, for Lyman Van Vilet, a speedy elongated and courageous athlete, stepped in and played a whale of a game against both Regina and Calgary.

Though not a flashy outfit, the Vics. are steady, have bundles of courage, and are quick to take advantage of an opening. It is to this factor that they owe their success in the Western final against Calgary. Though the Calgarians showed more speed and a stronger back division, the Vics. outplayed them on the line and were by far the smarter team.

In their Manitoba League games the Vics. were pressed in many games, but were never really seriously threatened. In Waddy Ferguson, the team captain, Richardson and Boyle, the Vics. have a trio that is hard to beat when it comes to plunging. Swan at quarter is a deft and speedy workman, who knows his business, while Allen and Turvey, the outside wings, have plenty of speed. Warren and Van Vilet are both sure punters, with the former the best.

Eastern fans may be sure that no matter what happens the Vics. will go down fighting. That they have grit has been proved in many contests.

The players who will comprise the party follow: Trender, snap back, 160 lbs.; Brady, inside wing, 172 lbs.; "Muckle" Warren, inside wing, 196 lbs.; Ferguson, middle wing, 172 lbs.; Richardson, middle wing, 170 lbs.; Allen, outside wing, 155 lbs.; Turvey, outside wing, 150 lbs.; Swan, quarter, 142 lbs.; Clarke, half back, 148 lbs.; Cheyne, half back, 146 lbs.; Greig Warren, centre half, 165 lbs.; Van Vilet, centre half, 160 lbs.; Mobberly, flying wing, 140 lbs. Subs.—Cowan, 162; F. Warren, 163; Boyle, 175; Stewart, 145; Martin, 148; Gosnell, 148; Maitland, 150.

5 BANDITS ROB 54 DANCERS.

Invade N.Y. Club and Escape With Loot Valued at $1,000.

NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—Within a block of a police station five armed men held up twenty-nine girls and fifty-five men dancers in a social club and escaped in an automobile with money and jewellery estimated at $1,000.

RIDEAUS MOVE UP.

OTTAWA, Dec. 1.—Ottawa Rideaus advanced one step nearer the Dominion Junior finals when they defeated Hamilton Tiger Thirds here Saturday by 20 to 5.

SENATORS DEFEATED

HAMILTON, Dec. 1.—(Canadian Press).—Close to six thousand fans turned out to see the opening game of the N.H.L. here on Saturday night and saw Hamilton defeate Ottawa Senators 5 to 3 in a game that was close and interesting throughout. On the night's play Hamilton had the edge but they did not have Frank Nighbor, Ottawa's star centre man to contend with for the best part of the second period, as he was an absentee, having several stitches put in his right cheek, the result of a clash with Ken Randall. Randall was given a major penalty for the attack which occurred at mid-ice when the two men were scrambling for the puck.

O.B.A.A. FUNDS IN GOOD SHAPE

Treasury's Cash Balance Increased to $4,500—Semi-Annual Meeting.

CURB "TOURISTS"

TORONTO, Dec. 1.—The semi-annual meeting of the Ontario Baseball Amateur Association was held Saturday in the Carls-Rite Hotel, following the winding up of the past season meeting of the executive. This semi-annual meeting is held for the purpose of discussing the various problems that occur during the playing season and suggesting remedies that can be carried home by the delegates and digested before being brought up at the annual meeting in the spring.

President D. P. MacFarlane of Harriston welcomed the delegates and mentioned a few of the happenings at the executive meeting, among which was the statement that claims against the $500 fund set aside by the O.B.A.A. to assist the bantam, midget, juvenile and junior series, claims have been received this year to the total of $1,833. Also that the association had at the spring meeting a cash balance on hand of about $2 800 and this had increased to the splendid total of $4,500, a very flourishing condition.

The president also stated that the executive were going to have legal advice in the matter of revising the constitution, as several times during the season the different delegates were able to "shoot the present constitution full of holes."

Importation of ball players in the different sections came in for a lot of discussion, and it was decided to recommend to the annual meeting that any player changing his place of residence between August 1 and January 1 must make application to the O.B.A.A. for permission to play in his new location not later than February 15.

The T.A.B.A. made several suggestions, among which was a request that the Ontario body take complete charge of the umpire question in respect to minor league playoffs, appoint and pay the umpires, and have a representative at the various final games.

That a standard btll be adopted for the minor leagues to get away from the present method of allowing the home team to produce whatever they may desire.

Among many suggestions from the Inter-County League was the following:

1. The annual membership fees of this association shall be five dollars for each senior team, three dollrs for each intermediate team, and two dollars for each team in lower classification.

The adoption of this amendment would mean that the T.A.B.A. would have over two hundred votes at the annual meeting and be in complete control.

Other suggestions presented were: In championship games, the home club shall, subject to the approval of the O.B. A A., make all arrangements for grounds, officials, etc. All grounds must be of regulation size and comply with the various measurements as laid down by the National league rules. Where the grounds or other conditions are found to be unsatisfactory, the O.B.A.A. shall have power to transfer such game to the nearest legal diamond. Representatives of the association shall have power to check all admission receipts and expenses.

All players or clubs intending to take part in exhibition games must secure the consent of the executive of the league to which such club or player belongs before playing such games. This to apply where the club or players are affiliated with the O.B.A.A. Where the club or players with whom it is intended to compete are not affiliated with the O.B.A.A., then special permit mus be obtained from the O.B.A.A. executive. A violation of this clause will render such club or player liable to suspension.

That all playing certificates be passed by the O.B.A.A. executive or by their appointee before being passed by the various leagues.

NEW SPEED RECORD.

LOS ANGELES, Calif., November 30. — A world's speed record was established here to-day by Tommy Milton, holder of the world's 250-mile record, when he negotiated the one and a quarter mile Culver City speedway during a practice lap in 34 and 4-5 seconds, an average of 129.31 miles an hour. The former record of 128 miles an hour was established recently on the Charlotte, N. C., speedway by Bennett Hill.

SOCCER GAMES PLAYED IN MUD

Derby County and Manchester United Tied — Derby's Centre Forward Banished.

SHEFFIELD LOSE

LONDON, Dec. 1. — (Canadian Press Cable).—Heavy grounds consequent on the down pour of the last few days made league football difficult everywhere, but notwithstanding this drawback there were several attractive encounters staged The feature of the league was transferred from the first to the second division and seventy thousand spectaters gathered at Trafford Park to witness the battle of the titans, between the home team, Manchester United and Derby County. The result was one-all, and Derby continued to lead the second division. The game was fast and hotly contested. Both brains and brawn were in evidence continuously, but a heroic struggle was marred by an incident that led to Derby County's centre forward, Fairclough, being ordered off the field. Up to this stage the visitors had been leading, but Manchester United equalized after Fairclough's departure, and maintained this score until the whistle. The standing of the two teams remains as it was, with the County still one point ahead in the aggregate.

Five home teams were crowned with victory on Saturday in the first division; four games were drawn while two visiting clubs took full points. These latter were Huddersfield Town, who downed Everton by 2-0 and Manchester City who took Preston North end into camp by 3-2 thus registering the Prestonians thirteenth defeat.

Bolton Wanderers' 5-0 score against West Ham was somewhat flattering. Their defence men were more resourceful than the metropolitans as their tackling was surer. But the Hammers were repeatedly unlucky and were handicapped by a sick goal-keeper.

Another hat-trick artist was Bradford of Birmingham who shot in three counters in the tilt against Liverpool. The game ended 5-2 in the Midlander's favor.

Arsenal owe a great debt to Lewis, their goalt-ender, who was the stellar performer in the tourney against Cardiff City, a game in which the points were split. The Gunners were lucky in Lewis who time and again stopped regular stingers. Otherwise they were hopelessly outclassed by the Welshmen.

Spurs Brilliant

Sheffield United, who succumbed to Tottenham Hotspur by 4-1, were completely outplayed. The Spurs form in every department of the game was brilliant. The United are causing considerable inquietude among their supporters, who see in the possible rally of Notts Forest and the already present come-back of Burnley a threat of United's relegation. Should misfortune overwhelm them totally, it would mean that Sheffield would pass out of first division football for some time since The Wednesday are at the moment still ploughing along in the junior ranks.

Huddersfield's win over Everton gave promise of a revival of form for the league title-holders and it brought them only within two points of the present leaders. Notts County The first three teams of the league are bracketted with an aggregate of 22 points—Notts County, Sunderland and Birmingham. They are followed by West Bromwich with 21 and Huddersfield with 20 West Brom garnered in a couple of points at the expense of Newcastle United yesterday in a game that was replete with brilliant plays. They opened with a hurricane attack which swept the Tynesiders off their feet and they netted their two goals with in the first few minutes of play. Newcastle could not improve although they tried valiantly. West Bromwich holding them down grimly. The result sent the Northumbrians down from fourth place in the league to the eighth.

Burnley made a praiseworthy attempt to get out of the rut and the complete shuffle of their team was justified by their 4-0 win at the expense of the late second division team, Bury.

Roberts sent in three tallies for them.

Apart from the feature contest between Derby County and Manchester City, the other second division games were devoid of outstanding interest. Only one visiting team won, Blackpool taking the points at Leicester. Ten of the eleven scheduled games were not played.

GAS CURES WORKERS' COLDS.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y., Dec. 1.—The chlorine gas treatment for colds has been administered to employes in the General Electric Works here during the last ten days, with a cure in 75 per cent. of the cases. It was said that the rest of the patients were improved and that the treatment, still in an experimental stage at the local works, would be extended to accommodate a larger number of employes at one time.

The cure is under the direction of Dr. Glenn Smith, the works physician. Six employes are treated at a time, a room being used in which they may read, write or continue small tasks. It was said that the works, employing upward of 20,000 persons, finds that common colds afflict at least 500 employes continuously, necessitating a loss of time and reducing efficiency.

WHEN THEY READ YOUR WILL

Wills are the most interesting and human of all documents. A will lays bare the real character and mentality of its maker. When a man sits down with his lawyer and frames the communication that is not to be opened and read until the grave has claimed him he occassionally displays deep wisdom and even a stroke of genius.

We have in mind the late Max Benjamin of Brooklyn N.Y. He bequeathed to his son a considerable fortune in worldy goods, then indicated that he considered a legacy of advice quite as valuable as a bequest of money:

"It is my wish that he marry only one of his faith, and that he marry before he is 30. I direct also that he invest $15,000 in a business, preferably in the drug line, and that he always be in a business from which he can earn the necessities and possibly the luxuries of life. I warn him not to neglect his health and to take a vacation summer and winter. He is to invest $50,000 in real estate—income property—and to hold the same as an investment and not as a speculation."

Every father should make a will, even if he hasn't a dollar's worth of property. That which you have learned through bitter experience should be summed up in writing. No legacy could be more valuable.

A failure, in particular, should make a will. In it he should tell why he did not succees. If he has really found the reason and can indelibly impress it on his son, it may be a fortune in disguise.

The greatest thing we get out of life is experience. And it is a grave mistake to let that experience be buried with us instead of passing it along, together with our interpretation of what this strange journey called life really means.

After all, property or insurance is the least important of the things we can will to our children. The memory of a happy home, of parents to be revered, and a childhood spent in healthful environment—these are legacies beyond price. So is an education, also wise guidance.

AT THE ROYAL.

A PICTURE THAT'S TRUE TO ITS NAME

"Hold Your Breath," Christie Feature, Crammed with Thrills and Humor.

You'll have to do what you're told if you go to the Royal Theatre Monday, "Hold Your Breath" is so full of brisk action and thrilling situations that it takes your breath away. A particularly apt title—tha. Jimmie Adams certainly deserves the lot he won from Al Christie for thinking of it.

"Hold Your Breath" is an Al Christie feature done in the same tempo as short Christie comedies. Unlike most feature comedies it has a good story as a basis for the humor. It is a tale of a girl who sets out to hold down her brother's reportorial job and does —although she rouses the whole town and almost breaks her neck before she succeeds.

The cast is comprised of a grand array of well known players. Dorothy Devore, the irrepressible little star of a multitude of Christie comedies, is the girl. Jovial Walter Hiers plays her well-meaning fiancee and Tully Marshall is seen as the Eccentric Collector. Jimmie Adams, Jimmie Harrison, Priscilla Bonner, Lincoln Plumer, Rosa Gore, Jay Belasco, George Peace, Victor Rodman Budd Fine, Eddie Baker and Douglas Carter comprise the remainder of the large and very capable cast. The picture was directed by Scott Sidney and written by Frank Roland Conklin, author of innumerable Christie scripts.

If you want a good time or are itching for excitement go to the Royal Theatre and "hold your breath." Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

BENNY LEONARD AND LARRY SEMON AT ROYAL

Benny Leonard, the lightweight champion of the world in a new story of the "Flying Fists" series and Larry Semon in "No Wedding Bells" are two of the quality shorter productions in the program at the Royal Monday.

AT THE GRAND.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS IN "THE THIEF OF BAGDAD."

Douglas Fairbanks in "The Thief of Bagdad" will have presentation in this city at the Grand to-night, to-morrow and Wednesday. It is significant that those interested in this new Fairbanks picture have not resorted to the use of adjectives that have become nauseating to moving picture devotees, such phrases as the "super-picture," "super-special," "classical masterpiece of filmdom," "superlative achievement of ultra-supremacy," "the world's first example of artistic perfection," and all that sort of a thing. Here is a picture that does not call for sesquipedalians to describe it. It is something so new and heretofore undreamed of in picture making, that it requires no absurd overstatements. It is what was heretofore thought beyond the camera's capacity to realize. The moving picture here reaches its apex. Yet, one might well think that when the critics, of such cities as have seen "The Thief of Bagdad," have come to write of it, they had first swallowed a bushel of alphabets, and crammed down all the various books of synonyms on the market—so rhapsodical have they been in describing this picture. And all this goes to prove that when a great picture comes along it is wise not to make too big a brag about it in advance; that is, give those who are invited to see and judge it a chance to venture an opinion. As to the substance of the story: it is a glorious fantasy of Bagdad—a fanciful story of love and adventure, laid in an imaginary world of fancy and abounding in amazing happenings, or, as one scribe has put it, "unbelieveable wonders," such, for instance, as the flying carpet, the winged horse that flies through the clouds, and numerous other like flabergasting conceptions, actually brought to life. And for its presentation in this city, "The Thief of Bagdad" will offer all the colorful atmospheric effects; a symphony orchestra, trained by the composer of the music; full scenic and stage effects; a band of Arabian musicians, with the instruments of their native country, as well as a Mohammedan prayer man. When "The Thief of Bagdad" is shown here there will be brought into use all the late inventions of motion pictures, including Edison's newest high-tension lamps, as well as the newly-invented silk and rubber screen. This latter device holds the illumination, with less reflection, providing a clearer picture than heretofore.

The sale of seats is now open. Mail orders will be filled in the order of receipt. This picture will positively not be shown anywhere else in this city this year.

AT THE CAPITOL.

Rudolph Valentino has three big love scenes in the motion picture version of Booth Tarkington's story, "Monsieur Beaucaire," coming to the Capitol Theatre to-day, Tuesday and Wednesday. Two of these are with Bebe Daniels and one is with Doris Kenyon. All three are what studio officials term "high-powered."

Valentino proves, in his three love scenes, that he had not lost any of the ability to make love, which has made him one of the most fascinating and compelling screen stars of to-day. His first scene with the Princess (Bebe Daniels) ends unsuccessfully and sends him off to Bath, England. There he meets the lovely Lady Mary (Doris Kenyon) and the heart of this young Frenchman flutters momentarily. But his flight of fancy for the English lady also ends disastrously and back to France he goes to find that the love which he once held for the Princess still burns in his breast. The final love scene between the Duke and the Princess is said to be one of the most tender and most picturesque ever photographed for a motion picture. While the two lovers, in the Gardens of Versailles, are locked in each others arms, King Louis XV and his court parade down the famous steps in the gardens, while sparkling water plunges down the cascades. It is a scene of great beauty.

Forrest Halsey, who adapted "The Humming Bird" to the screen, prepared the scenario for "Monsieur Beaucaire." The screen version of the popular story is said to be just as Tarkington wrote it originally. Bebe Daniels, Lois Wilson, Doris Kenyon and Lowell Sherman are featured in support of Valentino.

AT THE REGENT.

Mother Love—untiring, magnificent, all-consuming—that is the basis of the tremendous theme running through "The Lullaby," Chester Bennett's intensely dramatic offering starring Jane Novak, which comes to the Regent Theatre to-day.

There have been other mothers portrayed on the screen, mothers whose faith in their erring children has been predominant, humorous mothers, and mothers in whom a note of sorrow was the outstanding characteristic.

The mother which Miss Novak portrays in the first part of "The Lullaby" is a new type of mother—a mother who comes to this country from her native Italy, joyful, exuberant and devoted, upon whom time and experience stamps its furrows of care and suffering. This mother, through a long separation from her child, is shut out forever from the sight of her offspring by an unsurmountable barrier, a barrier erected by established social tradition. And it is in the self-denial, the repression, and the tragedy of her removal from the one that is nearest to her ,that Miss Novak rises supreme. Never before has that wistful appeal, for which she is so well beloved the country over, been cast to such great advantage as in this artistic picture.

Miss Novak also plays the part of the daughter, ignorant of her parent's nearness, whose great happiness only serves to set off in bold relief the harshness of her mother's sacrifice. In this part no trace of the other's mental anguish is apparent. She is simply the gay embodiment of youth with no earthly cares or concerns, loving life and living it to its utmost.

"The Lullaby" is the fifth picture which Chester Bennett has directed for F.B.O. in which Miss Novak has appeared in the leading role, "Divorce" and "Thelma" being the last two offerings, previous to which were "Coleen of the Pines" and "The Snow Shoe Trail."

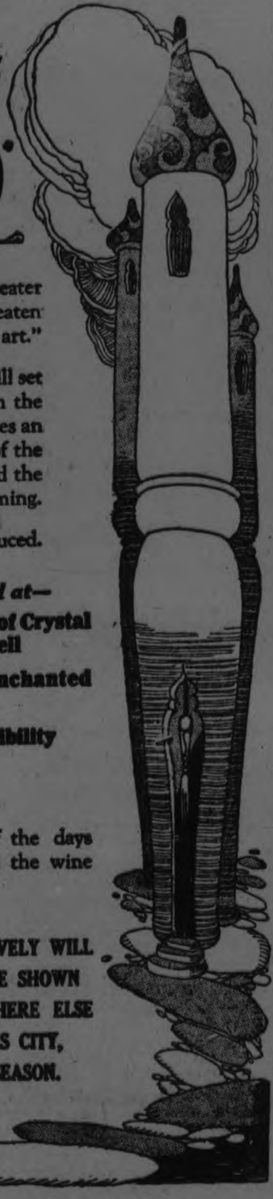
The Toronto Telegram Said:

There Is Nothing to Compare with

Douglas Fairbanks in The THIEF of BAGDAD



This marvelous production is hailed, not merely as a greater picture, but as a production that steps so far out of the beaten path that critics speak of it as "the creation of a new art."

Douglas Fairbanks, as the daring and devilish thief, will set your pulses going, and as the romantic lover will warm the cockles of your heart. "The Thief of Bagdad" inaugurates an new era in film production. The utter magnificence of the backgrounds, the startling technique of its drama, and the almost incredible camera effects are truly overwhelming.

You will marvel at—
The Magic Carpet that sails across the house-tops
The Winged Horse that flies through the clouds
The Living Drag--n in the Valley of Monsters

You will marvel at—
The Undersea City of Crystal where sirens dwell
The Forest of Enchanted Trees
The Cloak of Invisibility

MRS. J. D. CRAIG.

Frances Rutherford, wife of John D. Craig, furniture dealer at George and Brock streets, died suddenly on Saturday evening at her home, 45 McDonnel street. Although she had been indisposed since last Monday her condition was not considered serious, and her death was a grievous shock to her many friends in Peterborough.

Mrs. Craig was born here 67 years ago, a daughter of the late Robinson Rutherford, who was a member of the first town council of Peterborough, being a councillor when the town was incorporated. The Rutherford family has been identified with the growth and development of Peterborough for at least three generations and has been prominent in many branches of the changing community's affairs since the year when it attained the estate of a town. And not the least active in the spheres which claimed her effort and assistance was Mrs. Craig. She was a member of the George street Methodist church and an ardent promoter of the Co-workers' Bible class. In other associations to which she belonged she will also be greatly missed.

Mrs. Craig is survived by her husband and two sons, Mr. Fred D. Craig, editor of the Examiner, and Mr. Vernon R. Craig, also by three sisters, Mrs. Elizabeth Kendry, Mrs. Louis Sharp and Miss Sarah Rutherford and by one brother, Mr. Christopher J. Rutherford, all of this city. Another brother, Thomas J. Rutherford, for many years Chief of the Fire Department, predeceased Mrs. Craig some years ago.

The funeral was held this afternoon to the Little Lake cemetery, Rev. W. Harold Young conducted the services.

CORNWALL, December 1. — Coroner's inquest into the death of Beatrice Thorpe, the 17-year-old Matilda township girl, who was shot on Nov. 22nd, at the home of her father, Wm. Thorpe was held on Saturday afternoon, before Dr. E. H. Marcellus, of Iroquois.

Thomas Collison, who was arrested in connection with the shooting, was represented by Lorne W. R. Mulloy, of Iroquois, "the blind trooper," of South African war fame, while G. H. Davy of Iroquois, looker after the interests of the family of William Thorpe.

IN MEMORIAM.

BALL.—In loving memory of our dear brother, James, who died November 30th, 1916:

He had a nature you couldn't help loving,
And a heart that was purer than gold,
And to those who knew him and loved him
His memory will never grow old.

Death often comes to let us know
We love more dearly than we show,
But love in death shall let us see
What love in life should always be.

IN MEMORIAM.

BALL.—In loving memory of our dear son, James, who died November 30th, 1916:

Your loving voice is silent,
Your dear head lying low
But how we miss our darling boy
Just God in Heaven knows.
The depths of sorrow we cannot tell
Of the loss of one we loved so well.

And while he sleeps a peaceful sleep
His memory we shall always keep
His smiling face to us so dear
His gentle footsteps no more we hear
His willing hands and face so sweet
In heaven some day we hope to meet.
—Sadly Missed by Father and Mother.

DENOUNCES WASTE AND EXTRAVAGANCE

Robert Cowie Says Loss In Industry Would Pay 850,000 Men Full Wages.

NEW YORK, December 1st. — (United Press.) — Waste and extravagance in American business were strongly denounced by Robert E. M. Cowie, president of the American Railway Express Company, in an address delivered at the weekly luncheon of the Canadian Club at the Hotel Belmont on Saturday.

Waste was manifest said the speaker, not only in the American Home but in American business and it had been estimated by economists that the waste in manufactures and industry would be sufficient annually to employ 850,000 men at full wages. Both employers and employees were to blame.

Each worker should be developed into an efficiency expert declared Mr. Cowie. Then there would no longer be such experts "as one man he knew who having failed in fifteen lines of business was now employed by a big city as efficiency engineer."

JAMES PURVIS WAS BURNED TO DEATH

SARNIA, December 1. — Precautions taken by James Purvis, a young Sarnia township farmer, to guard against explosion of his lantern, cost his life yesterday.

Fearing that the coal oil he was using contained a considerable quantity of gasoline, Purvis carefully carried his lantern from the house to the woodshed before lighting it.

He struck a match near a coal oil barrel; there was a terrific explosion, and in the blaze which followed he was fatally burned and his house was destroyed.

With his clothing in a mass of flames, Purvis rushed toward the house, and his wife coming to his assistance, managed to beat out the fire.

Purvis was carried to a neighbor's dwelling, but in the meantime the fire had spread from the woodshed to the house.

The farmers in this district have been suspicious for some time that their coal oil contained a high percentage of gasoline.

The Crown has ordered an investigation.

GOOD EYES ARE RARE.

The Eyesight Conservation Council of America has issued an announcement showing an alarming state of affairs as far as our eyesight is concerned. The object of the council is to arouse general interest so that people will be impelled to give the care of their eyes some proper attention. Nine out of ten persons over twenty-one years of age have imrefect sight; above forty it is almost impossible to find a man or woman with perfect sight. A survey of 10,000 employees of factories and commercial houses in a large city showed that 53 per cent. had uncorrected vision and 13 per cent. had the defects corrected, making a total of 63 per cent. defective eyes.

REVOLT OF COMMUNISTS IN REVAL SUPPRESSED IN TWO-HOUR FIGHT

SIXTY ARRESTED

Followed Recent Conviction of More Than 100 Communists on Conspiracy Charges.

REVAL, Estonia, Dec. 2.—A revolutionary movement in Reval Monday engineered by Communists, was short lived, but a heavy toll of life was taken in two hours of fighting. The insurrection has been suppressed; all is tranquil in the capital and no disturbances are reported from other sections.

General Lainener, the new commander-in-chief of the army announced in the chamber last night that five officers, three cadets, two soldiers and three policemen were killed, and three officers, seven cadets and three soldiers were severely wounded. In all the wounded number forty or more, and sixty Communists are under arrest. The foreign minister issued a communique last evening reading.—"Communists this morning tried by force of arms to seize the general staff headquarters and official building. The insurrection was suppressed immediately. Two hours later order was completely restored. Other parts of the country are quiet."

Wreck Police Station.

The fifth police station was destroyed by Communists while stubborn fighting occurred at the central police station, situation in the neighborhood of the war office The Communists appeared in groups of ten or fifteen men. At the railway station, however they were in stronger force, and the building was only recaptured by government troops after a severe engagement. Heavy fighting also occurred at the Cadet School where two cadets were killed and nine wounded. A training officer was shot down in the streets. Tanks and armoured cars were employed against the revolutionaries but were withdrawn after a few hours. Military patrols are guarding the public buildings.

Already a number of those arrested are on trial before a court martial some of them had passports for abroad.

Thirty-nine of the convicted men were sentenced to hard labour and 74 others were sentenced to terms ranging from six to 15 years for complicity in the alleged plot.

In a statement which confirms the news despatches telling of the attempted coup at Reval, it is declared the movement wos immediately suppressed after Minister of Communications Kark had been killed. The total number of casualties was placed at fifty.

Martial law has been declared throughout the country, the legation stated, and General J. Lainener has been appointed commander-in-chief

Inspector Stewart Asks Council To Pay Damages Of Stone Thrown At Him

"There was a large rock thrown right through the north window in my kitchen", wrote License Inspector Joseph Stewart to the City Council last night. "I am paying for protection against crime in this city. My wife might have been killed, as the stone just passed her head. P. C. Meagher has the stone. I ask the city to pay for the damage."

This note, which was appended to an account for $2.10 for glazing, was referred to the Legal Committee, which will meet on Thursday night. It refers to an incident of ten days ago when a stone was hurled through a window fronting on Murray street, thereby chipping plaster from the wall inside, during the Inspector's absence from home.

Second Claim.

A second claim, for $1, recalls the occasion early in the year when iron bars were sawn out of the Inspector's cellar windows when would-be burglars attempted to reach confiscated liquor they supposed was in his cellar. In commenting on this event, Inspector Stewart tells the Council: "It looks that there is no protection against such conduct in the city."

This claim also was referred to the Legal committee.

Ellis Visited Lindsay Few Days Ago—Government Alienist Examined McGaughey.

DECISION TO-DAY.

LINDSAY, Dec. 2.—Fred McGaughey's fate will be definitely sealed today when a Cabinet Council will convene at the Capital for the purpose of passing final judgment in the matter. The Government, as a result of the solicitations of Mr. Leslie Frost, counsel for the condemned man, sent an alienist to Lindsay last week to examine him as to his mental condition, and the result of this examination will be an important factor in determining the course of the Cabinet.

Meanwhile, everything is being got in readiness for the carrying out of the death sentence at the local jail yard. The scaffold is in course of erection, close to the prisoner's cell, and in case the death sentence is carried out, the morbidly curious who plan to witness the proceedings from elevated positions outside the courtyard, will be disappointed, as the site on which the law will be carried out is so protected that no one save those permitted to be present in an official capacity will witness the final act.

Hangman Ellis was here a few days ago to lay out the plans for the erection of the gallows.

POULIOT ELECTED.

He Will Take Seat Vacated By Charles Gouvreau.

RIVIERE DU LOUP, Dec 2.—(Canadian Press).—Federal constituency of Temisecouata yesterday returned an unofficial liberal, Jean Francis Pouliot, in by-election rendered necessary by the death of Charles Vauvreau. To liberal candidates presented themselves, Mr. Pouliot and Dr. E. A. Parrot who was the official choice of the party.

Late returns show that unofficial candidate overwhelmed Dr. Parrot and that his majority will run around the 3,000 mark. Issues involved in election were local and very largely personal as between two candidates.

WILD CAT ACCEPTED CHALLENGE OF CAR IN NIGHT ATTACK ON THE APSLEY ROAD

Rushed Headlong Against the Glaring Headlights, Slipped Off the Hood and Was Run Over, Leaving Patches of Hair on Parts.

(Special to the Examiner)

APSLEY, Dec. 2.—The force of that figure of aggressiveness by which men applaud and measure the fighting qualities of their kind when they say "He's worth his weight in wildcats" was brought home to Harry Tanner of this village in an unusual and rather thrilling experience last Friday night when he was motoring home with his sisters.

A huge lynx suddenly appeared in the glare of the headlights and settling himself with wide open jaws and gleaming eyes leaped full tilt at the front of the car. Instinct perhaps thrust that reckless lynx at the fiery-eyed monster rushing toward him disputing the right of way. But in the lexicon of the lynx it is apparently also written that the bigger they are the harder they fall. Sometimes! But not always.

The animal missed a foothold on the hood of the car and was hurled back by the impact and run over Mr. Turner did not stop to investigate, but he returned later armed and with his brother. The lynx, however, had disappeared. That it did not escape unhurt was evidenced by the fact that some of its hair was found on part of the underbody of the car.

Lynx, or wildcat as they are known locally, are more feared than wolves or bears, for they will assume the aggresive and attack humans without provocation, something the others will seldom attempt.

DOPE PEDDLER CAUGHT BY POLICE TOLD OF PAYING $125 "TO FIX IT"

$1,000 WAS DEMANDED

MONTREAL, Dec. 2. — Percy Blurton, who admitted he had been a drug peddler until recently, but who has never been arrested, testified at the police inquiry Monday that he had once paid $125 "to settle things" when Constable Rochleau and Arthur Belanger had caught him as he was delivering half an ounce of heroin to a house on St. Felix street.

Witness declared that he had placed the drug on the ledge over the door when the two constables, who were waiting inside, opened the door and pulled him in. Blurton declared the constables knew he was coming with the drug, which he was to deliver to a colored man known as "Skinny" Smith.

Mr. Lanctot: "Were you arrested?" "Well, I was taken in charge."

"Were you taken to jail?" "No," replied Blurton, who said he was taken and shut up in the kitchen with the proprietor of the house, after being searched. He had been sent back to the door for the drug, but it had disappeared.

Was out $125

Witness said he had $145 on him at the time, but no more drugs. The constables had questioned him as to what he was doing here.

Mr. Lanctot: "And you were out of pocket when all was over?" "Yes, $125."

"How did they let you go?" "The man of the house did the fixing. When we were in the kitchen he said that the matter could probably be fixed if I had enough money, and I gave him $125 of what I had on me to settle things."

Witness added that he had not actually seen the thing done but that the proprietor of the house had come back and told him that it would be all right.

"Were you to pay any more money?" "Yes, sir. Some days later I was to put up another $375 more and then another $500."

"When were these payments to be made?" "The $375 in three or four days or five days and the $500 in a couple of weeks."

"Making $1,000 in all?" "Yes."

No Charge Was Laid

"And you were never brought to

Bullets Menace Lives Of Employees Of City

Tragedy sought in vain for victims at the city incinerator today, invoked by the criminal carelessness of some citizens and averted by the quickness of the men who work there.

The first warning the men had of trouble was when explosions from the depth of one of the furnaces and whizzing bullets caused them to quickly shut down the lid. A search was made and there were uncovered, just about to be thrown into the flames:

20 soft nose steel jacketed, 303 calibre cartridges, and 9 number six shells for a 12 guage shotgun.

Had these been cast into the fire they might very well have killed one or more of the staff before the cover could be replaced.

As it was, shells that had been dropped through the trap door exploded and gave the men a nasty shock as the bullets came whizzing up.

PRAISE FROM LINDSAY FOR LOCAL OFFICIALS

City Clerk Armstrong and Leon Frazer Called "Hustlers."

LINDSAY, Dec. 2.—At a meeting of the Lindsay Board of Trade on Friday night, when Lindsay's industrial future was discussed, Mr. T. H. Stinson, K.C., took occasion to pay a tribute to Secretary Frazer, of the Peterboro Chamber of Commerce and City Clerk S. R. Armstrong. Both these officials, he declared, were hustlers from the ground up, and had been of invaluable assistance to the city as industrial commissioners.

Mr. Stinson also took occasion to refer to the move inaugurated in Peterboro some time ago to build a railway line through the township of Apsley to Haliburton district. This project, he declared, had been blocked for a time, but if it was carried to completion, Peterboro would secure the northern trade and Lindsay merchants would wonder what struck them.

CAIRO ACCEPTS BRITISH TERMS; CRISIS AT END

New Government's Action Must Be Submitted to Egyptian Parliament.

QUIET IN EGYPT

LONDON, Dec. 2.—The new Egyptian government has, according to information reaching the foreign office Monday, accepted the remaining demands of the note left over by the Zagloul administration recognition of British protection over foreign interests and retention of British financial and judicial advisers and the British director of public security. The evacuation of the Alexandria customs, it is further learned, has been ordered.

Thus the crisis appears for the time being at an end, but late advices from Cairo report that an official communique announcing the settlement is withheld owing to the resignation of some of the new ministers which might imply a divergence of views in the cabinet on acceptance of the British terms. This, however, is not directly stated.

Egypt and Sudan remain quiet and the student strike situation seems to be improving, although a number of students have been arrested at Alexandria in connecion with a seditious circular. That apprehensions are not yet dissipated is seen in the special police precautions adopted to protect Ziwar Pasha, the Egyptian premier, from possible attack. The government's action in yielding to the British demands has still to run the gauntlet of criticism when the Egyptian parliament reassembles, and even should criticism be silenced by the dissolution of parliament, the nationalist agitation is not likely to be easily controlled.

Students Arrested.

No Official Statement.

CAIRO, Dec. 2.—The Egyptian cabinet sat until a late hour last night discussing the situation growing out of the demands of Great Britain in connection with the assassination of Sirdar Stack. The cabinet decided that no official statement regarding the British demands should be published until today.

Although it was reported that the minister of communications had resigned, it was stated last night that such was not the case. Tewfik Pasha, Riffat, has accepted the portfolio of minister of education and no difficulty is expected in filling the remaining vacancy in the cabinet, that of minister of public works.

Sunday night sentinels posted in the British residency grounds fired upon two persons who were presumed to be prowlers.

It was stated that footprints were subsequently found, but that nothing further transpired.

The judicial authorities who have been investigating the recent arrests of members of the Egyptian chamber have decided that the government's position is in accordance with the law. The ordered detention of those who have been remanded for a fortnight.

Workman Started Burglar Alarm on Wine Cellar.

OTTAWA, Dec. 2.—The network of burglar alarms in the home of Mr. Justice Idlingtn of the supreme court of Canada was responsible for the arrest Monday of Jerome Hebert, aged 23, on a charge of attempted burglary. Jerome, was hired to do some painting, worked industriously until he reached the wine cellar, which is alleged to have been broken into. The alarm was heard by Mr. Justice Idlington who was reading in his library and a policeman was sent for. Hebert was remanded until Wednesday.

"BILL" WHITTY ROLLED A PEANUT WITH PITCHFORK PAYING AN ELECTION BET

IS WELL KNOWN.

STIRLING, Dec. 1.—Rolling peanut with a pitchfork along Front Street, Wm. J. (Bill) Whitty publicly settled his election bet Saturday afternoon in a humorous reflection of the result of the West Hastings by-election that amused a crowd of spectators to whom the penalty stunt had been duly tipped off. Mr. Whitty started to "roll his own" from Morden Bird's corner on Front Street along the sidewalk to Whitty's hotel, "The Stirling House," on Mill Street. The village wits had a big session at Mr. Whitty's expense, and the incident served generally to relieve the partisan tension that survived the by-election.

Mr. Whitty is prominently known throughout this district not only as a businessman but also as a sportsman especially through his connection with the Stirling hockey club for many years.

HE SURRENDERED

Appeared Unconcerned And Said He Could Clear Himself of Charge.

PARIS, Dec. 2. — (Canadian Press).—James Charles Arthur, who held a temporary commission in the British army during the war, was arrested by the Paris police Monday as the mysterious "aide de camp" of the Indian Prince "Mr. A.", in the Robinon blackmailing case which was threshed out in a London court last week. The police said Arthur would be turned over to the British authorities today and Arthur, smiling, remarked that he was quite willing to return to England, where he was confident he could clear himself of the charge of complicity in the plot.

The arrest was at the instance of the British authorities, the Paris police, having been notified by the British consulate Saturday that there was a warrant in England for the man. The British embassy sent him yesterday to make a statement, and Arthur proceeded there and prepared, as he afterwards explained to face prosecution. He asserted that he had surrendered, which is considered virtually true, as he was taken while on his way to the embassy.

The embassy officials said they knew nothing of the affair, except that they had learned Arthur was under arrest.

The first police version was that Arthur had actually entered the embassy, offering to return to London, but was told to go to the French government secret police and that he was taken into custody on his way there.

The "aide-de-camp" appeared quite unconcerned, arguing that if he had received a large sum, such as was charged, he would not have to earn a living in Paris, but, nevertheless, had enough to quit France if he had wished to run away.

WINTER CLOSES THE CHEESE FACTORIES

STIRLING, Dec. 1. — Duncan Marshall, Jr., son of Mr. J. S. Marshall, has been elected by acclamation to represent Hastings North in the fourth boys' parliament. The session of this parliament is to be held from December 26th to 31st in the Parliament Buildings, Toronto.

The friends and neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Thrasher invaded their home recently and presented them with an electric floor lamp. Mr. and Mrs. Thrasher are about to move to Stirling and take possession of the business he has purchased from Mr. Geo. Lagrow.

Young Judges' Success.

The live stock judging team of Hastings county, under the supervision and training of Mr. Ray Atkins, the district representative, made a good showing at the Royal Winter Fair at Toronto recently. Although having to compete with teams having college training in this line, they ranked 21st in a group of 36 teams and stood 3rd in Eastern Ontario, being beaten by only a few points by Lanark and Carleton teams. Peel county carried off first prize, Mr. Ray Williams, of Rawdon, stood 15th in a group of 136 competitors, a very fine showing as the greater number were college men.

The same team will go to the Ottawa Winter Fair this week and will compete with teams from twelve counties in Eastern Ontario on Wednesday and Thursday.

College men will not be eligible for places on the teams and each man must be a practical farmer under 26 years of age.

Cheese Factories Close.

The cheese factories in this locality have all ceased operations for this season, disposing of the last of their cheese on Saturday at a slightly reduced price, from the week previous. Now for settling day when the results of the season's make will be disclosed.

Mission Band Tea.

The Mission Band of the Methodist church held a successful tea at the home of Mrs. (Dr.) Walt, last week. It was the first public effort of the band and they were encouraged by the result, $29.00 being the receipts which goes towards the support of a cot in the hospital in Chentu, China.

An open meeting of the Maple Leaf Mission Band of St. Andrew's church was held recently. There was a good attendance of parents and friends of the band, an excellent programme was presented.

A Thanksgiving pageant in which every member of the band had a part, the majority in costume, proved interesting and instructive.

The annual bazaar and fowl supper of St. John's Anglican church was held last Thursday night and notwithstanding the bad weather, it was a very successful event in every respect.

Rev. S. W. Dyde, LLD., of Queen's College, Kingston, was in charge of both services at St. Andrew's Presbyterian church on Sunday, and gave two excellent sermons.

Rev. C. W. Barrett, of the Methodist church, conducted anniversary services in Keene on Sunday and the services in his church were taken by a student from Albert College.

Absent 40 Years.

Mr. John H. Thompson, of Thorold, who was the founder of the News-Argos, accompanied by his wife, were visitors here last week, after an absence of 40 years. They were greatly impressed by the improvements and changes since then.

Messrs. Thos. Montgomery, Sr., and Ed. Baker, accompanied by their wives left on Thursday morning (Nov. 27th) by motor car, for Florida, where they will spend the winter. At Belleville they were joined by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Kerr, also Miss B. C. Donnan and children.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Parry, of Hoard's will occupy Mr. Montgomer's house during their absence.

Mr. Malcolm Cook and wife, of New Liskeard, who have been visiting friends at St. Ola, were in town on Saturday.

Mrs. A. Kennedy left last week to visit her daughter in the west. In the meantime Mr. Newton White will occupy her house.

Mr. W. H. Waller is spending a few days with his son, Seymour and family, in Campbellford.

Queens Dominion Champs.

Tri Color Aggregation Have Quit Training and Laid Away Uniforms.

TORONTO, Dec. 2.—(Canadian Press).—Winnipeg Victorias held another meeting yesterday and reconsidered Sundays decision not to come to Toronto to play Queens for the Grey cup, and decided they would if Canadian football union and tricolor were willing.

President Chown of C.R.U., on learning the Victorias wish immediately got in touch with Queens and Secretary R. W. Hewitson, of C. R.U. to see if the western champions could be accommodated. But it was too late, and Queens retain the Grey cup and the Canadian football championship.

The Tri Color on hearing Saturday that the Victorias had decided not to come east, rugby equipment was packed away and shoes greased until next fall. Players broke training and under circumstances they did not care to play.

"Exhausted Nerves and Palpitating Heart"

Mrs. L. Whiting, 202 King St. West, Brockville, Ont., writes:

"I took very sick with my nerves and stomach, and seemed to be all run down. At times my heart would flutter and palpitate so and I would take such weak spells in the pit of my stomach that I sometimes thought I would never get better. I tried several doctors, but it seemed nothing they gave me helped. I had almost given up hope when a friend advised the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I tried it, and can say it certainly has done wonders for me. I did not stop until I had taken twenty-five boxes."

GOOD PROGRAM BEFORE HOUSE

British House of Commons Met To-day For First Time Since Election.

(By Lloyd Allen—United Press Staff Correspondent).

LONDON, Dec. 2. — The House of Commons met to-day for the first time since the general election which gave Stanley Baldwin and the Conservative party a majority. The re-election of the Right Honorable J. H. Wheatley as Speaker was the only business before the House. It is customary not to oppose the incumbent until he retires or dies.

Wednesday, Thursday and possibly Friday will be taken with the swearing in of members, and King George will formally open Parliament with a State ceremony next Tuesday.

When the janitors opened the doors of the Houses of Parliament at 8 a.m. to-day, there, on the doorsteps, sat a score of members, two at least of whom had waited since midnight for the purpose of being first in, to get the choice seats in the Commons. In the House it is first come, first served, except for the "Treasury bench," where the Government sit, and Lady Astor, who generally fusses until she is given her favorite seat on the aisle. By 10 a.m., all the seats on the Government side of the House, where the Conservatives sit, had been taken. Tories arriving later, had to find seats among the Liberals. The King's Speech, which will be read from the Throne in the House of Lords on Tuesday, is awaited with interest. It was prepared by Premier Baldwin, and is understood to deal with the following subjects:

1—Egypt.
2—The discarded Russian treaties.
3—Imperial Preference.
4—The safeguarding of the Industries Act—to prevent dumping of imports from abroad.
5—Restriction of undesirable aliens.
6—Assistance to agriculture.
7—Reduction of food prices.
8—Departmental economy.
9—Tax Bill, which the Conservatives hope will prove popular.
10—The Anglo-German Trade Treaty.

The Liberal party, now hopelessly in the minority, was relegated to an inconspicuous third place, will meet and elect ex-Premier David Lloyd George their party leader, succeeding ex-Premier Herbert S. Asquith, who was defeated in the general election.

The Laborites will meet to-morrow and re-elect ex-Premier Ramsay MacDonald as their party chief.

DRAFT LETTER ON HOME BANK

TORONTO, Dec. 2.—(Canadian Press).—Astounding revelations regarding his motives for certain actions while employed by now defunct Home Bank of Canada were made yesterday afternoon during trial of R. P. Gough, former vice-president of Bank, by W. A. MacHaffie, former manager of Winnipeg branch formerly assistant to M. J. Haney when latter was vice-president and president of the bank. Mr. MacHaffie is credited generally with being first to fly danger signals because of method in which home bank was conducting its business.

"Mixed motives" were ascribed by Mr. MacHaffie as cause of draft letter addressed to minister of finance which was never sent and copy of which he sent to Mr. Haney in Feb. 1918. In first place he asserted that he had never intended the draft letter to go to the minister as he had divulged all it contained three months before to deputy minister of finance. His first notice had been that he had hoped he would be discharged from bank, so that he would have some grounds for action for damages on which he had taken legal advice some months before; but as it was he was being gradually frozen out by Mr. Haney, he said, who was trying to get him to resign. In the second place he had sent copy of draft letter to Mr. Haney in hope that it would provoke discussion among directors and might result in Mr. Haney "being ousted from Bank."

Another feature of Mr. MacHaffies evidence was that he had hoped to secure General Managment of Home Bank so that he could sell institution. In this connection he related that he had been approached by assistant General Manager of Dominion Bank in 1913 and had been told that if home bank were for sale Dominion Bank might consider buying it. That would have been the only course open to him without violating the law, provided he had been appointed General Manager, was Mr. MacHaffies assertion and by this he meant that under his management the Bank could not have gone on paying dividends out of profits made from unpaid interest on doubtful loans. In draft letter MacHaffie charged that Haney's policy was to endeavor to rehabilitate the Bank by series of speculative ventures, chiefly in steamship activities; that the Bank was loaning large sums of money and was to receive but moiety of expected profits.

The Love that never Dies

Your Home Secure

"A man's home is his castle". The protection of his wife and family—and of his castle—is the chief function of the life insurance policy.

It is difficult for the average man early in his career to accumulate sufficient wealth to guarantee that his income and his home will be perpetuated, should he be removed by death. By surrounding his home with the protection of life insurance, worry for the future is eliminated. This makes for a peaceful and happy present.

Each insured individual lends stability to the homes of other insured individuals. Thus life insurance becomes the greatest of co-operative systems in which the ideal of "all for each and each for all" is realized.

Procrastination is the greatest foe of family security. This "thief of time" is also the thief of home comforts for a bereaved family.

You should cease putting off this vital matter. Why not discuss your insurance programme with a life insurance man to-day?

OUR DECLINING IMPORTS.

In the twelve months ending Oct. 31 Canadian imports from the United States were valued at $534,000,000, or $86,000,000 less than in the preceding twelve months. In the same period Canadian exports to the United States were valued at $418,000,000, an increase of $7,000,000 over the preceding twelve months. Exports from Canada to all countries in the year ending Octfl 31 were $1,076,000,000, or $258,000,000 greater than the imports. In the previous year the exports were $994,000,000, a surplus of $83,000,000 over imports. It is not surprising that the Canadian dollar has returned virtually to par.

These figures cannot be reconciled with the cry that there is trade stagnation in Canada produced by a flood of imports. Purchases from outside have steadily decreased, particularly from our keenest competitor, the United States. In the fiscal year 1921 imports of United States products were valued at $856,176,820. They have dropped more than $300,000,000, a sum that cannot wholly be acounted for by price deflation. On the other hand, since 1922 our exports to the United States have risen from $292,588, 643 (in the fiscal year) to the $418,000,000 recorded for the past twelve months. Since 1922 the price-level has been fairly stable, the great deflation having taken place in 1920 and 1921. Whatever may be the causes of the industrial depression, now disappearing, they cannot be found in the statistics of the import trade.—Toronto Globe.

WHEN A NATION IS AT WAR.

When the great war was under way the demand arose that there should be a conscription of wealth as well as of men. Many affected not to understand what was meant by "the conscription of wealth." They professed to believe that it meant that all a man's possessions would be taken from him—his house, lands, money, everything he owned. They knew better than that, but they did not want to understand.

In the United States the two great political parties have gone on record in favor of the conscription of wealth and labor as well as of men should another war occur. The Republican national convention adopted the following resolution:

"We believe that in time of war the nation should draft for its defense not only its citizens, but also every resource which may contribute to success. The country demands that should the United States ever again be called on to defend itself by arms the President be empowered to draft such material resources and such services and essential commodities, whether used in actual warfare or private activities."

"War is a relic of barbarism and is justifiable only as a measure of defense. In the event of war in which the man power of the nation is drafted all other resources should likewise be drafted. This will discourage war by depriving it of its profits."

With the two national political parties in the United States going on record in these explicit terms the matter seems to be settled so far as that country is concerned. The idea is that no man is to be considered too rich to fight for his country if he is physically fit. If a man, rich or poor, is physically unfit to be conscripted for fighting purposes he can be conscripted to serve in ways for which he is fit. The idea further is that when a country is calling upon its young men to go forth and perish in battle it shall also call upon the wealth and resources of the country to spend themselves as freely as human life is spent—and without anybody having an opportunity to make a fortune out of the country's war-time necessities. War is a ruinous business, and the main idea behind the conscription of wealth is to see to it that war is no longer to be the greatest profit-making adventure in the world for a shrewd and calculating few of the people. Reduce war to this basis and there will be less of it.—Toronto Star.

THE LILY PAINTERS.

It has never been easy to understand the mental processes of those restless adventurers in literature who persist in making new English translations of the Old and New Testaments to prove that the King James version is out of date or inadequate. And when you read the work of these writers, who in an effort to "reach the people" have been putting the biblical texts into slang or business English or the brisk lingo of contemporary light romance, they seem to be firmly fixed beyond understanding or argument. Another of them, the Rev. Dr. James Moffatt of Glasgow is about to publish the result of his labors. Advance reports upon this work make it appear quite as cheerless as any that has preceded it.

Writers with a sense of the beauty and power latent in English go to the familiar Testaments for inspiration. They do not go as critics or reformers. The great trouble with all new and novel translations and revisions from the great texts originates in the inability of the translators to perceive that majestic principles require majestic and simple forms of expression and that a thought can be in itself so beautiful as to be beyond the need of word draperies of any sort. The great moving quality in the English of the Bible is a sort of hidden music that is never absent even in the simplest passages. The worker in modern English who manages to capture a trace of this quality becomes great inevitably and as a matter of course. But men like Dr. Moffatt have notions of their own.

In the Moffatt Bible it will be said that "in the land of Eden, to the far east, God the Eternal planted a park." This jolting sentence is offered as an improvement of the original English text, which says: "And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden." What would a translator so insensible to the music of words do with the Book of Ruth, with the Psalms or with the Book of Job? One may only guess. But some intimations of the havoc which an earnest worker in the literary division of the vineyard may do are present in the first sheets of Dr. Moffatt's new Bible. The word "neighbor," which is very old and incomparably rich in meanings related to definite ways of life, is eliminated and "countryman" substituted. The good doctor may be an earnest internationalist and a stickler for the broad view, but he knows little of the inner meanings of words. God, as he sees it, did not make a covenant with Noah. He made a compact. "Covenant" rings. It means more than "compact." It implies the complete involvement of the spirit as well as the mind. But, like all the short, blunt, brave words that gave early English unexampled force and color, "covenant" is ushered out and long drab phrases are ushered into do the work of two syllables.

Dr. Moffatt is a scholar of Oxford University, where even in these distracted days great English is occasionally written. Why he should give much time and labor to the business of devastating his mother tongue it is hard to understand. One thing is certain. A deep, hidden, instinctive sense of beauty in the race will keep the old English Testaments safe from the reformers. Dr. Moffatt's new Bible will go bang to the top shelves of the libraries with all the other experimental translations that have preceded it.—Philadelphia Ledger.

HOME BANK.

Human nature being what it is, depositor-victims of the Home Bank debacle are unlikely to weep bitter tears as they read of the convictions of former officers and directors of that defunct financial institution. Punishment of those responsible for the collapse of the Home Bank is not the major concern of the depositors, however. To date the depositors have received but one payment on account, the reimbursement being at the rate of 25 cents on the dollar. The Federal Cabinet, at the fag end of the last session of Parliament, announced that relief of Home Bank depositors would be considered at the next session of the House. Premier Mackenzie King's announcement yesterday that it would be useless for a deputation of the Home Bank Depositors' Relief Association to wait upon him can only be interpreted as meaning that the Cabinet does not intend to prepare a recommendation before Parliament convenes. The Premier's reply likewise indicates that he persists in the belief that there is neither moral nor legal liability encumbent upon the Government—a belief which few outside of the Government and not all within subscribe to. Trial of Home Bank directors has revealed that irregular reports were prepared by officials, concurred in by their superiors and accepted without question by the representatives of the Government. Therein lies the responsibility of the Government, and it cannot be evaded. It is not suggested that the Government completely reimburse depositors at one stroke of the pen, but the victims are entitled to something more definite than a vague promise of "sympathetic consideration."—Hamilton Spectator.

WHITE RULE IN THE ORIENT.

Great Britain's problem in Egypt is symptomatic of conditions extending beyond the British Empire. At Paris there is anxious debate concerning eventualities in the whole of French North Africa. From certain quarters come intimations that Italy and the Soviet Government have been fomenting unrest in Africa. But Rome has certainly nothing to gain by a general upheaval in Africa. Her own position in Tripoli would be among the first to suffer. And though Moscow openly professes itself the champion of the "colored slaves of Western imperialism," it makes a difference when Moscow's own ox is gored. The Soviet Government showed no lack of ruthlessness a few years ago in Turkestan or only the other day in Georgia. The crisis in Egypt is only one illustration of the permanent problem of European domination in the Orient, as accentuated by the World War and its sequels. Moorish success against Spain comes at a time when Kemal Pasha's victories over the Greeks are not yet forgotten. The East has been growing self-conscious and thinks more vigorously of self-determination.

Nationalism in Egypt, in India, in North Africa and in our own Philippines is not the product of intolerable conditions created by the suzerain Power. Too many arraignments of white "imperialism" suffer from a confusion of ideas. We are asked at the same time to believe that the white man's rule has reduced the subject populations to misery and that these subject populations are fully capable of ruling themselves. Colonial discontent today arises not from the "exploitation" of the subject races, but from their upliftment. In India and in Egypt the opposition to British rule has been led by the educated classes; and there is no one to deny that white rule has fostered education in the Orient. The opposition in the Philippines is fostered by the remarkable spread of education under our encouragement. In lesser degree that holds true for French North Africa. In the economic sphere the colored peoples have far from suffered by foreign rule. Egypt and the Sudan have certainly no reason to look back regretfully to the times before Omdurman.

For a solution of the present crisis and the fundamental problems behind it we need not look to force. It should come, in part at least, from sounder and saner thinking on the part of the leaders of the Oriental peoples. We may find a parallel in Europe itself immediately after the World War, where class-consciousness tried to express itself very much as national self-consciousness in Asia and Africa does today. The post-war chaos seemed to be an admirable opportunity for the socialistic creed of economic self-determination for the masses. All that was necessary was to seize control of the industries; to expropriate the capitalist, and to enter into automatic possession of the Promised Land. It did not take very long for Europe to learn the lesson. The ghastly results in Russia and the experiments on a smaller scale in Western Europe have demonstrated that it is one thing to seize and another thing to administer, one thing to expropriate and another thing to operate. Today the dominant feeling among the vast majority of workingmen outside of Russia is one of co-operation with the "capitalist" in the management of the economic machine. Instead of the "control" of industry by the workers, it is their "interest" in the industry that is emphasized.

Some such process apparently must be gone through in the colonized Orient. Whatever may be their ultimate aspirations, the peoples under white rule will learn that the surer if slower way is not through the "seizure" of self-determination, but through a steady advance toward fitness for self-rule to the point where self-government should come almost as a matter of course.—New York Times.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Electing municipal boards by acclamation seems to be the fashion this year. In a number of Ontario cities there will not be a contest for any civic office, saving the ratepayers the expense of an election.

There was a good outlet for the common cattle, and practically all were cleaned up, but at no higher prices, the market for this class holding steady with last week.

There was but little doing in the export trade section, and prices here were unchanged from last week. Rogers & Maybee took a few loads and are shipping east about 400 cattle.

EGG PRICES.

OTTAWA, Dec. 1. — (Canadian Press).—The demand for fresh eggs is still in excess of supplies and prices have again advanced. A steady market is looked for in storage eggs. Ontario county shippers are paying, extras 54 to 55, firsts 50 to 54, seconds 38 f.o.b.

Toronto market firm. Jobbing specials 75, extras 73, firsts 44 to 45, seconds 38 to 39.

Montreal market firm. Jobbing extras 54 to 65, firsts 49 to 50.

Ottawa market firm. Jobbing storage extras 47 to 48, firsts 42 to 43, seconds 37.

MONTREAL GRAIN.

MONTREAL, Dec. 1.—(Canadian Press).—The export and domestic trade in grain here to-day was again very quiet, there being little demand from any source for supplies. In sympathy with the weakness in the Winnipeg future market for oats prices on spot for car lots were reduced 1¾ cents per bushel. There was no change in prices for Ontario grain, car lots of No. 3 extra malting barley being quoted at $1.08, and No. 3 grade at $1.07 per bushel, ex-track, with No. 2 white oats at 63 cents, No. 3 grade at 60 cents, and No. 4 grade at 58 cents per bushel, ex-store.

WINNIPEG LIVESTOCK.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 1.—(Canadian Press). — Livestock arrivals, 3,900 cattle and calves, 4,200 hogs and 200 sheep and lambs.

There was a fairly good demand prevailing in early trading on the cattle market and prices generally appeared to maintain a fair tone over last week's close. Medium to good quality butchers brought $4 to $4.75 and plainer sorts $3 to $3.75. Good quality feeder sorts sold at $3.50 to $4.

On the hog market prices were weaker. Early bidding for thick smooths opened at $7.75 with indications that the bulk would sell from $7.90 to $8.

Prices for sheep and lambs were firm. Good lambs sold 12 to $12.50 and decent handyweight sheep $7 to $7.50.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

CHICAGO, Dec. 1. — (Canadian Press).—Something of a jolt came to holders of wheat to-day as the result of an unlooked for big increase of the United States visible supply total. Notwithstanding that earlier the wheat market had ascended to new high price records for the season, declines due to the visible supply announcement left values heavy at the finish, 1 3-4 cents net lower to 2-8 cent gain, with December 153 3-8 to 153 5-8 and May 160 3-4 to 161. Corn closed unchanged to 3-4 cent down, oats unchanged to half cent off, and provisions showing 10 to 37 cents advance.

Special significance appeared to be attached to the fact that the visible supply enlargement carried the total to above 100,000,000 bushels. The actual increase was but little greater than for the corresponding week a year ago, but the entire democratic visible supply at that time was only 71,808,000 bushels, whereas to-day's aggregate was 100,363,000 bushels and was a defeat to traders who had been expecting stocks to dwindle rather than to pile up.

STERLING RATES.

Sterling cables, $4.64 1-8.

NEWS OF MARMORA.

Sudden Death From Croup—School Under One Roof Again.

MARMORA, Dec. 2.—A very sudden death occurred in the village on Thursday night, when Walter Whiteman, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Whiteman, passed away from a violent attack of membranous croup. The little laddie was playing at six o'clock and a few hours later he was dead.

The funeral of Mrs. Vandervoort took place in Norwood on Friday afternoon. Mrs. Vandervoort formerly Miss Pearce of Norwood, was well-known in Marmora, having spent her married life in Rawdon township. Last winter, she spent at the home of her niece, Mrs. F. N. Marrett.

Mrs. Marrett, Mrs. F. S. Pearce, Mr. Reginald Pearce and Mr. Wm. Pearce attended the funeral.

Rev. D. R. Clare and Mrs. Clare and Master Earl spent Friday in Tweed with the former's mother, Mrs. James Clare.

The young people's league of the Methodist Church meeting of last week was in charge of the "Literary and Social" department under Miss Connor. The topic, "Music in the Home" was read by Miss Florence Clare. Miss Lorraine Bell gave a short account on Schumann's life after which she rendered on of his instrumental solos. Then followed a reading by Miss Dora Osborne consisting of a humourous description of the playing of Rubenstein. Another topic paper was given by Edith Phillipps "On the history of Music." Miss Connor gave a brief account of when and under what condition, the "Rock of Ages" was written, after which the league sang the hymn. Another humourous reading "The Bicycle Ride", followed, given by Hilda Thomson. That meeting was one of the most instructive, interesting and entertaining evenings since the league has been organized for the new year.

The tenth meeting of the Literary Society of Marmora Continuation High School was held on Friday last. The programme was unique but interesting. As it was in charge of third form all those who before that time had not yet spoken in the meeting had to give a short speech on "Scotland." Many varied accounts were given. The boundaries and history of Canada was given by Mr. Michael McGraw, Evelyn Neal. "The founding of the Scottish Darien Colony" was given by Vincent Lynch. John Crawford gave a good account of the "Massacre of Glencoe." Anna O'Conor spoke on the climate of Scotland, while Mary Maloney graphically sketched the life of all the important Scottish cities. Hazel Williams gave us a great deal of information on "The Bobby Burns' Country." Lorraine Connor described clearly the beautiful city of Edinburgh. James Potts related the "Founding of the Bank of England" by "Patterson". Jean Thomson and Vera McInroy gave short readings on Scotland. Mildred Badore concluded by describing the people. When all the speeches were finished Jack Grant proved himself to be a very able critic and his remarks were all witty. Although he severely but justly criticized the speakers his criticisms were well worth listening to by all.

Some years ago, due to overcrowding in Marmora Continuation School, it was necessary to hire the Masonic Hall for first form.

At the suggestion of Miss Campbell and the recommendation of the inspector it has become possible for the school to be again continued under one roof.

The new arrangements will take place Monday. All the pupils did their share in transferring the articles fom the Hall to the School on Friday.

the real breatheable tablets, make the throat, chest, and lungs cold-resisting. When a nasty cold or a coughing bout foretells the revival of your old bronchial trouble, the best thing to do is to take Peps at once to strengthen and the chest. When a Peps tablet is taken from its preserving silver wrapper and allowed to dissolve in the mouth, it gives off powerful medicinal and germicidal fumes that immediately circulate with the breath through all the air-passages, and destroy any germs that have got into

By this direct treatment Peps keep trouble off the

COBOURG DISTRICT HOLSTEIN SALE

COBOURG, Nov. 20.—The big event of interest to the farming community here was the Fifth Annual Sale of the Cobourg District Holstein-Friesian Breeders' Club, which was held at the Horse Barns at Horse Show Park on Thursday. There annual sales serve to show the trend of prices for pure-bred stock, and Thursday's brought out the fact that there is quite a slump from last year.

At the sale held here last November, 1923, the highest priced animal was a cow sold by John G. Waite, Wicklow to J. W. Corneilius of Cobourg for $255. Further the forty head of cattle sold last year brought $4,480 or on an average of $112, which is considerably over the average for this year. This year the highest priced cow was consigned by Gough Bros., Bloomfield and sold for $180.

In regard to prices this year as compared with last, it is interesting to note that at 10th Annual Holstein-Fresian sale in the Perth district last year, thirty-six animals sold at an average price of $137, the highest price being $200.

At the Niagara Peninsula sale last year, this being a newly organized association, 26 head of cattle brought $2,797.30 going over $100 each.

The sale held here on Thursday was under auspices of the Provincial sales of Pure Bred Live Stock, and was attended by buyers from Peterborough, Norwood and Campbellford, and from the lakefront district from Prince Edward county on the east, to Whitby on the west. Mr. James A. Caskey of Madoc was again ring master, and Mr. Norman Montgomery, Brighton, was auctioneer.

COBOURG HAS LOST ANOTHER INDUSTRY

Felt Company Stock in Hands of Liquidator—Town Largest Creditor.

This week the Cobourg Felt Co. completed the manufacture of stock from the material that has been on hand, and all the help have been laid off. The sale of the stock by the liquidator is now being done, which may take a month or so. Whether the plant can be sold as a whole is yet unknown, and if it is not the town of Cobourg will have to realize from the company's indebtedness to the town from the sale of the building and the machinery, on which it holds the mortgage. The bank has control of the manufactured goods, and will realize from these. Several parties have been looking over the plant with a view to buying, but whether anything will come out of the negotiations is as yet not known. It is to be hoped that the plant will get under way shortly, as it has been giving employment to a number of hands ever since it opened in 1913. The plant has been run by the liquidator for the past few months since an assignment was made.

The town is one of the largest creditors, being interested to the extent of about $34,000, and if the company is wound up it may be some time before the town can realize on its security. This amount is what is due to the town from loans made to the company at various times, for which it took a mortgage on the plant and equipment.

The company originally manufactured felt shoes and slippers, but for the past few months it has been making a standard brand of leather boots, which have found a ready sale. There is some talk of a firm taking over the business and continuing the manufacture of these, and a special meeting of the Manufacturing Committee of the town council was called for last evening to talk over the matter.—Sentinel Star.

HAD BAD SPELLS WITH HER HEART

Mrs. C. Martin, R.R. No. 2, Orillia, Ont., writes: "I have been troubled with my heart for a long time and very often had bad spells with it. I would take fainting spells, and my husband had to have somebody to stay with me all the time. He got me everything he could think of to see if they would do me any good, but nothing seemed to help me. One day a friend was in to see me and advised me to try

Milburn's Heart And Nerve Pills

My husband went and got me two boxes, and after the first one was finished I felt like a different woman. I cannot recommend them enough to all those who suffer with anything wrong with their heart or nerves."

Milburn's H. & N. Pills have been on the market for the past 30 years and are put up only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

ICE ON RICE LAKE.

Muskrats Are Building Their Houses Closer In This Year—Bailieboro News.

BAILIEBORO, Dec. 2.— Rice Lake froze over for the second time this season, on Friday night. Although this ice was not as thick as the first ice it remained over the week end. It is expected that we will now have some warmer weather after this cold spell has passed, as this is only the second time that the lake has frozen over this season, and the ice has always disappeared twice before the lake stays frozen for the winter. The muskrats in the marshes have built their houses more inland this year than in former years, and they have only recently completed their building.

The ducks have nearly all deserted the lake for more open water, and the hunter's sport is about over for this fall.

Presented Play.

The Ladies Institute of this village again presented their play entitled, "The Spirit of Canada", on Friday evening last. As before the basement of the Anglican church was comfortably filled, and about forty dollars was taken in at the door.

Both times that this play has been presented, it has been thoroughly enjoyed by all who hear it, and at the conclusion the president received an invitation to take the play over to Millbrook sometime in the near future.

About fifty of the members of the institute took an active part, all who were costumed to represent the different nations of the world, while the play consisted principally of recitations and songs which also represented the different nations.

A Short Course.

A meeting is being held on Tuesday evening at Centreville to discuss the problem of holding a short course at either Bailieboro or Centreville during the winter.

Miss Loreta Barnard who is attending the Peterboro Normal School spent the week-end at her home.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Byers of Rochester motored to Bailieboro on Friday, where they remained until Sunday visiting friends at both Bailieboro and Peterboro. Mr. Byers stated that they found the roads in excellent condition all the way over.

Mrs. Wm. Northcott of Bewdley was a guest of Mrs. Thos. Johnston on Sunday.

Mrs. Ross Moncrief and children and Miss Charlotte Barnard have been visiting friends at Oakwood.

The W.M.S. of the Methodist Church met at the home of Mrs. Wm. Bateson on Thursday afternoon.

About twenty one of the members were present and during the afternoon three quilts were quilted for the missionary box. Lunch was served at the conclusion and a most profitable afternoons' work was completed.

BANDIT'S BODY TRANSFERRED

MONTREAL, Dec. 2.—(Canadian Press).—It was learned this morning that the body of Guiseppe Serafini, executed bank bandit, was recently transferred from its first burial place in Potter's Field and re-interred in the Catholic cemetery. The removal of the coffin was witnessed only by the hanged murderer's widow and a few friends.

Mayor Turner, Given Credit for Year's Success, Praises Aldermen for Their Loyal Co-operation and City Officials for Their Faithful Service

Reciprocal felicitations were the order of the evening as the City Council prepared last night to close its history of things attempted and things done during the year, Mayor Turner lauding the co-operation and backing of the Aldermen while they praised his splendid leadership. His Worship was host at a happy supper where all the Aldermen were present except Alderman J. W. Meyers, who took his seat in the Council Chamber last night for the first time in many months and is not yet fully recovered from his severe illness. City Clerk S. R. Armstrong; City Treasurer Frank Adams; Assistant City Engineer George W. Perks, and Assistant City Clerk Charles E. Curtis, were also guests of the Mayor.

The Aldermen showed unbounded enthusiasm in their tribute to the Chief Magistrate before the adjournmen was made, led as spokesmen by Aldermen Phelan, Crowe and Maher. "The Council certainly appreciates the business-like way in which Mayor Turner has conducted the affairs of the city in 1924, and every Alderman is proud of having served under him," said Alderman Phelan. "We all hope that he will return to the Chief Magistrate's chair in 1925 for just so successful a year as this has been."

Did they applaud? Well!

Alderman Maher added his tribute in characteristic style, recalling the harmonious relations that had continued throughout the year between the Mayor and his colleagues on the Aldermanic board.

Thanked the Council.

Mayor Turner refused to accept all the boquets handed him by the Aldermen, passing on a posy to every man on the Council and to Mr. Armstrong, Mr. Adams, Mr. Parsons, and the other civic officials, for the excellent help they had given and for their loyal and faithful support. Mr. Armstrong, as the monitor of the Council and the treasury of information on which the city executive is often called to draw, was given a few extra blossoms in the oratorical posy with which His Worship closed the session.

CANADA SCORING HIGH AT CHICAGO

CHICAGO, Ill., Dec. 2.—(Canadian Press).—Canada scored a little slam in the hard red winter wheat division, taking twenty-five out of thirty places. I .C. Mitchell led off with the winning sample at the international livestock show yesterday. He is from Saskatchewan. Following close on his heels was Seager Wheeler of Rosthern, Sask. The third and fifth places went to the United States.

Strange, of Fenn, Alta.; thirteenth, to Geo. Enoch of Lloydminster; fourteenth, to H. Tucker, of Manitoul, Man.; and fifteenth to George Avery of Kelso, Sask.

Livestock Winners.

Two division championships fell to the lot of H. M. Lee, of Highgate, Ont., at the stock show Monday. He was awarded blue ribbons for the champion wether of the Cotswolds and also champion wether of the Lincolns. Both winning animals were yearlings. In the first-class the reserve championship went to F. S. Claspell, of Hampton, Ont., and in the other to S. R. Robinson and Son, of Deerfield, Ont. Cecil Stobbs of Wheatley, Ont., won the other. The Southdown class, with a yearling and the reserve, went to a local entry.

FEW FOLKS HAVE GRAY HAIR NOW

Druggist Says Ladies are Using Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture improved by the addition of other ingredients by asking at any drug store for a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

TWO MORE MISSING.

No Trace of Plane or Occupants Which Set Out From Sacket Harbor Sunday.

OGDENSBURG, N.Y., Dec. 1. — (Canadian Press).—The airplane that left Sasket Harbor yesterday afternoon for Ogdensburg after an unsuccessful search for two men believed lost in the wreck of the sister ship a week ago, failed to reach its destination and it is feared that it also has been lost. No communication has been received from Josephs Rasbach of this city, owner of the plane, or his pilot, William Talbot.

NEW PARLIAMENT MEETS.

It Is Already Known That Rt. Hon. J. H. Whitley Will Be Reappointed.

LONDON, Dec. 1. — (Canadian Press). — The new British Parliament meets this week in the House of Commons, assembling to-morrow to elect a Speaker, a mere formality, as it is already known that Rt. Hon. O. H. Whitley will be re-appointed. This will be followed by the swearing in of members, which will occupy the remainder of the week, and the real business of the House will not begin until the following Tuesday, when the King opens Parliament with a State ceremony.

While the swearing in of members progresses, Parliamentary Laborite and Liberal parties will elect respective chairmen for the session. David Lloyd George will be the choice of the Liberals, and Ramsay MacDonald's re-election as chairman of the Laborites is regarded as undoubted.

PLAN POWER PLANT.

Three Million Dollar Generator at Slave Falls For Winnipeg.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 2.—(Canadian Press).—Plans for a three million dollar power plant at Slave Falls and a two million dollar transmission line to Winnipeg have been completed for the Hydro - Electric system, it was announced. No date has been set, however, for the commencemnt of work. The time of the start depends, according to J. G. Glassco, Hydro manager, on the solution of the Norman Dam control problem and on geenral conditions.

A meeting was held here Monday of representatives of the Provincial Government and of power interests for consideration of the Norman Dam question, and Premier Bracken wired Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior, that he honed in a day or two a solution would be reached satisfactory to local interests. It is understood locally that under new proposals the Federal Government is given an easement over the whole works and control of the waters.

TWO AVIATORS FOUND.

OGDENSBURG, N.Y., Dec. 1.—Joseph Fasbach and William Talbot, aviators who left Sacket Harbor for here in an airplane yesterday, were located today at Taylor's Bay where they landed last night on account of darkness.

HALIFAX ASSURED OF NEW ELEVATOR

Sir Henry Thornton Promises Completion for 1925 Grain Business.

HALIFAX, N.S., Dec. 2.—(Canadian Press). — Absolute assurance that Halifax is to have a new grain elevator and that it will "be ready in ample time for the 1925 business" was given by Sir Henry Thornton to the council of the Board of Trade and a gathering of prominent citizens at a meeting held at the Board of Trade, following Sir Henry's arrival in Halifax Monday.

Accompanying this promise was a frank expression of opinion on the part of Sir Henry with respect to the south-end terminals.

"I do not believe in doing any work there of a temporary nature," the chief said. "My opinion is that the original plans should be carried out. I cannot state definitely that this will be done, but I think that is what we will do. You may be sure the situation will be remedied one way or the other."

Sir Henry discussed the matter of shipments of grain through Portland and urged that this matter, which he said was one of great delicacy, should be approached with tranquility and without prejudice.

This was more or less of an international problem, he said. He concluded with the suggestion that the maritime provinces should send a representation to the west to lay the viewpoint of the maritimes before the people of the western provinces and arouse their interest in this port.

In his address, Sir Henry recounted a number of changes that had been effected of material benefit to the maritimes, but said he and his board of directors wished to disclaim all credit for them.

"They have been done because they should have been done," he said. He concluded with the remark that with the completion of the elevator it would be possible to do much more for the shipping interests of this port.

PUCCINI BURIED.

High Honors Paid to Great Italian Composer in Death.

BRUSSELS, Dec. 2. — (Canadian Press).—Funeral services were held Monday for Giacomo Puccini, famous Italian composer, who died here Saturday. The ceremonies in the Church of St. Marie were attended by a representative of the King, members of the diplomatic corps, the Italian Embassy staff and prominent members of the Italian colony, and a great crowd of notables and music lovers. The huge mass of flowers at the church included wreaths from King Albert of Belgium, King Victor Emmanuel of Italy and Premier Mussolini.

Her Headaches Were So Bad She Couldn't Do Anything

Once the head starts to ache and pain you may rest assured that the cause comes from the stomach, liver or bowels, and the cause must be removed before permanent relief may be had.

There is no better remedy for headaches of every description than

as it removes the cause of the headaches in a way that no other remedy will do.

Mrs. Wm. Helpard, Lower Stewiacke, N. S., writes: "I suffered for a long time with my head. It would ache and ache until it made me so sick I could not do anything, but after taking four bottles of B.B.B. I feel that I cannot recommend it too highly to all those suffering from headaches of any kind."

B.B.B. has been on the market for the past 46 years and is recognized by all who have used it to be without an equal as a remedy for headaches; put up only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

CANADA IN NEED OF MORE OPTIMISTS

KITCHENER, Nov. 29.—That there is not enough optimism in Canadian business was the point which J. D. Hayes, director of the Toronto down town Kiwanis Club emphasized at today's luncheon of the Kitchener and Waterloo Kiwanis Club at the Y.M.C.A. He compared the attitude which business men in the United States and Canada have in regard to business conditions generally, and the manner in which this reflects on the progress and growth of the respective countries. "The American people have made the United States the great country which it is because they are optimists and boosters. Canada has fallen behind because Canadians keep quiet about their country," said the speaker.

He told of how he had tried to secure an idea of business conditions in the middle west where business was quite evidently bad, and of how every shop keeper and clerk was optimistic and had declared business to be good even tho not a customer was in sight. "We need optimists like that in Canada," he declared. Pessimism is a poison of the rankest kind and there has been too much of it in the coffee of the Canadian business men. Confidence and optimism are necessary if Canada is to take her place in the business world," he continued.

The Toronto speaker scored the man who plays golf when he should be attending business. "The man who plays three games of golf a week cannot hope to have his business on the same footing which it enjoyed in pre-war days when golf was less popular," emphasized Mr. Hayes. "Golf is alright but it should be played when it does not interfere with business," he added.

NO BOGIES POPPED UP TO SPOIL HARMONY OF LAST 1924 MEETING OF CITY COUNCIL OF PETERBORO

Snappy Business Session Marked Conclusion of Year's Regular Activities.

SOME NEW IDEAS.

May Demand Correct Statement of Values on Building Permits—Regulate Garages.

Closing the regular sessions of the City Council for 1924 last night, the members came face to face with none of the threatening bogies that had thrust their heads above ground at some previous meetings, and adjourned shortly after ten in a tranquil atmosphere with the consciousness of a good night's work well done. A pleasant hour followed the closing of the minute book for the year, when Aldermen and City Officials were the guests at supper of His Worship the Mayor.

As is usual at the end of the year, Council last night found itself faced by several very important questions, some of which were left until 1925 while others were set down for special discussion at a meeting of the Committee of the Whole Council on Wednesday night. The big item to be brought up then is the consideration of plans finally drafted under direction of City Engineer R. H. Parsons for the proposed sewage disposal plant. After years of work and seemingly interminable changes. The plan seems at last complete, and after Council's approval has been given will be submitted to the authorities in Toronto.

Among the new business introduced at last night's meeting was a proposal by Alderman McIntyre to compel the shtating of correct values on building permits, the immediate provocation for which was an item showing the cost of a garage at $25, which he declared an absurdity.

Building Permits.

The City Engineer's report indicated that there were 9 permits issued for dwellings, with a total value of $27,500 1 for a garage, $25, and 20 miscellaneous, $6,140; a total of 33,-663.

In discussing this report the cost of $25 for a garage was challenged by Alderman McIntyre, who declared it an impossible figure.

"Very few buildings permits, he continued, "give the correct amounts. It is impossible for anyone to build a garage for $25.

Alderman McIntyre thought that the matter should be taken up and the correct statement of values insisted upon. The misrepresentation is unfair to builders and contractors as citizens see these low figures and wonder why their quotations are so high in comparison.

Alderman Phelan pointed out another phase of the question when he mentioned that the figures go out as a criterion of the building activity in the city and full credit should be obtained.

Mayor Turner: "It has nothing to do with it. The assessor makes a separate assessment."

The question was left over until 1925.

Work Needed.

Alderman Crowe asked that something be started soon to give work in relays to men in need of employment. He thought the same men should not be used right through the season.

Alderman Morrison said there was not a man applying for work yesterday, contrary to the usual condition after a snow storm which is not a bad indication.

Dangerous Crossing.

Mayor Turner said something should be done to relieve the situation at Donegal street crossing of the C.N.R. All of the Aldermen who visited the scene of the recent fatality were opposed to closing the street, but thought that a signal device might serve to protect citizens.

Alderman Crowe said a bell would not be heard but a sign painted on G. Walter Green's factory might help.

Alderman Maher said the Council should go on record as opposing closing the street having just completed a new bridge there, and moved that a committee be appointed to meet the railway inspector.

Alderman McIntyre said human life is so important and this crossing so dangerous that he considers a crossing watchman or a gate there essential.

Alderman Maher moved that a conference regarding the form of protection be held with the engineer of the Board of Railway Commission, and his motion carried.

Regulate Garages

Alderman Turner suggested that the bylaw to regulate the erection and use of garages be extended to cover all classes of buildings. The building by-law is being ignored consistently, he said.

Mayor Turned said the object of the law is to guarantee fire protection.

Alderman Morrison said everyone in the Council knows the bylaw is not carried out. So long as the Council goes over the inspector's head he can do nothing.

Alderman Maher said it is up to the Council to protect the citizens who are now being given houses with 2 by 4 scantling cut in two lengthwise and concrete foundations that taper.

The bylaw was passed giving power to the City Engineer to regulate the placing of garages on lots.

Garbage Contract

A bylaw to authorize the execution of a contract for the collection of garbage was passed in all its readings.

A bylaw authorizing the execution of a lease with Canadian Nashua Paper Co, was also passed.

Alderman Morrison introduced a bylaw to authorize the construction of certain sewers, which was passed.

The approach of the municipal elections was heralded by the passing of a bylaw naming the polling places and returning officers.

Dustless Sweeper

Howard M. Bishop reported the termination of the Dustless Sweeper Co. agreement with the city and asked the Council's wishes regarding storage and winter use should the snow go away. The Company would store the sweeper free of cost unless the space is required before spring, which is not a likely contingency.

Mr. Bishop's offer was accepted with an expression of appreciation from His Worship on the work of the machine and the cooperation Mr. Bishop had given.

Douro Account

Alderman Stocker drew attention to a debt owing the city by Douro and to a smaller debt due Douro which he said should be applied on the indebtedness. Alderman Stocker's motion to this effect carried.

Sewage Disposal Plant

Alderman Crowe said the plans are ready for the sewage disposal plant and he thought they should be sent for approval.

Arrangements will be made for this by Mr. Perks and the plans will be brought before a meeting of the Committee of the whole Council on Wednesday.

Gravel Purchases

Alderman Stocker said he was told by a prominent official in Toronto that anyone might obtain particulars of gravel purchased by the Suburban Areas Commission but on application request was brought up to the County Council, which body it did not concern.

Alderman Stocker moved that Alderman Morrison be asked for the figures.

Alderman Morrison said he could not see why Alderman Stocker had not asked him for the information before. He would give the information without a resolution.

Appreciates Reception

"I wish to express my appreciation of the successfully carried out programme for the entertainment of their Excellencies Lord and Lady Byng upon the occasion of their visit to-day," G. N. Gordon K.C., M.P., wrote to Council.

"Both of these distinguished guests told me they appreciated the splendid courtesy extended to them by Mayor Turner and the City Council."

Christmas Grants

The Council made the usual grants of $25 to the Children's Aid Society and $25 to St. Vincent's Orphanage for the Christmas treat.

New Sidewalk

Fire Chief's Report

Fire Chief George Gimblett reported that there were 61 alarms in the month of November in answering which the apparatus travelled 145 miles.

What The Council Did

Started a move to protect Donegal street C.N.R. crossing.
Passed a by-law to regulate the placing of garages.
Prepared for municipal election by naming polling places.
Learned of completion of sewage disposal plant plans.
Made the usual Christmas grants to children's homes.
Enjoyed Mayor Turner's hospitality at supper.

JAPS

Japan will attempt to reopen the immigration question. Embittered by outright exclusion, jingoes over there are talking very boldly.

In view of remote possibilities, it is just as well that only a tenth of one per cent of our population is Japanese—one resident Jap to every 999 Americans.

Japanese business men, powerful in shaping diplomacy, are apt to forget that the United States is their best customer.

Will Take Off All Excess Fat

Do you know that there is a simple, efective remedy for overfatness, one that may be used safely and secretly by any man or woman who is losing the slenderness of youth? It is the tablet form of the now famous Marmola Prescription. Thousands of men and women each year regain slender, healthful figures by using Marmola Tablets. You, too, can expect to reduce steadily and easily without going through long siege of tiresome exercise and starvation diet. Marmola Prescription Tablets are sold by all druggists the world over at one dollar a box, or you can secure them direct from the Marmola Bldg., Detroit, Mich., on receipt of price.

LUDENDORFF

How are the mighty fallen! General Ludendorff has been boycotted politically by nearly all the veterans' organizations of the old German army he led. The chief reason is his support of monarchist movements. The republican spirit seems to be very strong in Germany—apparently strong enough to give it the whip-hand enduringly. A return to kaiserism is possible but not probable at this stage of the game.

60TH ANNIVERSARY OF GRAHAM FAMILY IN LAKEFIELD LIFE

Mrs. W. M. Graham Entertained Friends at "Invercauld" — Reminiscenses in Dinner Speeches.

LAKEFIELD, December 1 — Mrs. W. M. Graham entertained about 30 friends at "Invercauld" on Thursday evening last in honor of the 60th anniversary of the coming of the late Mr. Robert Graham and his family to Lakefield.

The earlier part of the evening was spent by the ladies in playing bridge, the gentlemen joining the party at 10.30 for refreshments after which a toast list was run off, Mrs. Graham acting as toastmistress and announcing the toasts.

The toast to the King was first and duly honored, the name of the Prince of Wales being coupled with it. The next toast was to "Lakefield, our Home," and the replies were divided into past, present and future ,and Lakefield as a place to live in. The past of Lakefield was replied to by Mr. W. H. Casement, whose father was among the earlier settlers in the village, and who himself has been a life long resident. Mr. Casement's speech included some interesting reminiscences which were much appreciated.

Reeve Strickland.

Lakefield's present was dealt with by Reeev J. C. Strickland, grandson of the late Colonel Strickland, who founded Lakefield, nearly one hundred years ago. Mr. Strickland spoke on the present status of Lakefield in a very pleasing manner The future of Lakefield was the subject taken by Mr. J. W. Ridpath, chairman of the Board of Education. Mr. Ridpath spoke of the splendid work being done in the village park which it is expected will prove a valuable asset in the near future.

Lakefield as a place of residence, was Mr. C. S. Tanner's special allotment and he dealt with it as one who has resided in the village since boyhood, and who loves it.

"The learned professions" was the next toast, and it was also divided into the Church, Education, Law and Medicine.

Rev. W. Cox replied to the toast to the church, weaving in some very humorous anecdotes and personal experiences.

Education and Law.

Rev. A. W. Mackenzie spoke on "Education," making a most appropriate and feeling reference to the work of Miss Duff, the principal of the Lakefield public school. Miss Duff's record is a remarkable one, and her part in the education of the children of the village has been of the greatest value. Mr. Mackenzie alos recounted some reminiscences of his earlier days in the village.

Mr. Mackenzie, who is headmaster of "The Grove," a school well known throughout Canada, is an educationalist of rare attainments.

The law was allotted to Magistrate O. A. Langley, who has been a resident of the village for 25 years. Mr. Langley regrets that in that time none of the young men and women of the village have seen fit to enter the legal profession but hopes that some one or more will do so in the future. It would afford him great pleasure to assist one of the young people of the village to make a start on the legal ladder of fame.

Medicine was the subject allotted to Dr. J. C. Smith, who made a pleasant little speech on his associations with the village and the late Robert Graham.

Toast to the Ladies.

The last toast, the important one, to the ladies, was the toast to which Mr. H. G. FitzGerald replied in his inimitable manner. Mr. FitzGerald has a reputation as one of the famous after-dinner speakers of Lakefield and on this occasion he was at his best as he illustrated his remarks with anecdotes of past and present days in Lakefield, and safeguarded the accuracy of his statements by "notes."

All the speakers referred to the records of the late Robert and Wm. Graham in the Masonic Lodge where both had held the highest offices, and were highly respected.

The toast list closed with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne" in the time honored fashion.

The first prize for bridge was won by Mrs. Osborne and the consolation prize by Mrs. Laurence Grahame.

During the evening Mrs. A. B. Burrows sang a solo which was much appreciated, and Mrs. C. S. Tanner played a beautiful piano solo.

Messrs. A. B. Burrows and G. H. Graham assisted the hostess and her daughter in serving the refreshments.

The occasion was a pleasant one, commemorating as it did the coming to the village of the Graham family, and recalling and relating amusing and interesting reminiscences of old days.

STIMULANT

Sugar was fed to Yale's soccer team to increase the physical energy of the players. The purpose was mainly to verify the theory that depletion of the supply of sugar in the blood is what causes exhaustion of athletes Professors say, results were "noticeable but not convincing."

Maybe we are gliding into the time when athletes will be laboratory products, medicated before contests. Skill and stamina count more than brute strength, however, and these are beyond the reach of the chemist.

RAILWAY HEAD GAVE ADDRESS

HALIFAX, December 2. — Sir Henry W. Thornton, president and chairman of the Canadian National Railways completed his tour of the Maritime provinces here to-day when he met the Board of Trade of the city and later in the day addressed the Canadian Club and the North British Society.

The address to the Canadian Club was made at noon and that to the North British Society last evening.

In his address to the Canadian Club Sir Henry went over the ground which had been covered with the members of Board of Trade earlier in the morning and explained some of the difficulties that the management is encounteing in meeting all of the requests which have been put forward not only by them but by other sections of the country as well.

Sir Henry also took advantage of the opportunity to brand as unfair, and designed with an ulterior motive, propaganda recently emanating from Ottawa and published by the newspapers to the effect that the Canadian National Railways are over-staffed as far as general officers are concerned, and that both as regards personnel and salaries the Canarian National is in excess of the Canadian Pacific.

Sir Henry said the story had recently been set afloat that the Canadian National Railways are over-staffed in general officers. These rumours originated in Ottawa and were based on a report received by tlle Bureau of Statistics, but were sent out by someone not connected with that department. The rumour was deliberately pushed out for hostile purposes, and only half the truth had been told.

This newspaper correspondent told you certain things calculated to discredit the Canadian National Railways in the eyes of the Canadian people but he did not tell you this: That the density of passe ger traffic on the Canadian Pacific Railway is 49.5 per cent. greater than on the Canadian National, that the density of freight traffic on the Canadian Pacific is 32.6 per cent. greater than on the Canadian National; that the Canadian National Railways operate 22,000 miles of track against 15,000 on the C.P.R., or approximately 7,000 more. The general officers of the Canadian Pacific Railway number 337 and those of the Canadian National Railways 340, or a difference of 23, and that this difference of 23 officers should be compared with the difference in mileage and the difference in density of traffic between the two roads. He did not tell you that the average salary of the general officers of the Canadian National Railways is $6423, and that of the C.P.R. general officers $6657, and he did not tell you that the ratio of the salaries of general officers to the total payrolls of the two systems is Canadian National Railways 1.63 per cent., and C. P.R. 2.23 per cent.

This is a fair sample of the kind of campaign that is carried out against us in some quarters. This is a fair sample of some of the things we have to contend with in addition to the already heavy duties of administering the property.

Sir Henry and his party left tonight for Montreal. A stop will be made en route at River du Loup.

IMPERIAL PREFERENCES.

Earl of Beauchamp Strongly Opposes Proposed Preference.

LONDON LONDON, Dec. 2.—(Canadian Press Cable.)— "I protest against the worship of this fetish of the conference resolutions," declared the Earl of Beauchamp, new leader of the Liberal party in the house of lords, speaking to a gathering of the national liberal club to-day on "the insincerity of imperial preference." The Earl's allusion was to the last imperial conference when the British government, without the people's mandate, offered preferences to the Dominion of foodstuffs and tobacco. He declared that the price of the fruit concerned would be raised, under the proposed preference, at least £1,500,000 on the basis of last year's imports. In conclusion the Earl declared that the workers of Britain had no use for protection or preferences.

CABLE SERVICE INAUGURATED.

LONDON, Dec. 2.—(Canadian Press).—British "all red" cable service between West Indies and Great Britain direct was inaugurated yesterday with congratulatory messages between West Indian committee and various insular chambers of commerce overseas.

A REPLY TO REV. WALLACE CHRISTIE.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—The Rev. Wallace Christie continues to breathe out threatenings and slaughter against those foes of Union who dare turn the light on official Methodist theological shortcomings.

He is much more concerned in stopping the inquiry than in finding if these things are true. To his mind it is a much greater crime to tell the truth if it will damage the Unionist cause than to prevent Christ's little ones being perverted by unsound teaching. Our Lord said it would be better for a man to have a millstone tied about his neck and cast into the sea, rather than cause one of these little ones to stumble. Evidently, Mr. Christie does not agree with Him.

In Mr. Christie's letter of November 26 he attacks the letter sent out by members of his congregation and proceeds to misrepresent or misquote it in every reference he makes to it. He says the Editor of The Christian Guardian did not state that he rejected the inspiration of the Scriptures or the Atonement, but only the interpretation put on these doctrines by the pre-millennialists. This is a mere evasion. The pre-millennialists accept unreservedly the inspiration of the Scriptures and the Atonement as taught by Paul and the other apostles. No injustice was done or intended to be done, as the Editor in numerous other places commits himself unreservedly to the denial of both doctrines in any shape. In the same issue of The Guardian is an article on page 4, prominently featured, entitled "Is God Personal?" by Rev. A. D. Belden, B.D., in which the writer states: "Man has no other key to God than his own nature, let him trust it." The Bible says that the heart of man is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked. Thus is the inspiration of the Bible denied. A little further on in the same article the writer says, "Jesus is the truth about God, to believe that truth, to accept God as your Father as simply really personal, as your best friends, that is to be saved." Thus is the Atonement denied.

In No. 9 of the Ryerson Essays published by the Methodist Book and Publishing House under the direction of the same editorial control is the statement: "It (the sacrifice of Jesus) did not purchase forgiveness; it did not make it possible as far as God is concerned; it ceases to promote spiritual religion, if considered as a legalistic sacrifice to satisfy Divine law. We ought to give up our lives in sacrifice, in order to expiate our sins, or show our revulsion therefrom."

There is no escape from the responsibility of these utterances. No one but the author's Unionist Presbyterian friends are found ready to come to his defence.

In evidence of the good faith in which the editorial in The Christian Guardian is used let me say we printed and circulated a photo reprint of the whole editorial remarks in question.

Mr. Christie further asserts in regard to the book review: "This is a total falsehood, not one word of approval was given with the citation of the book." This statement is apparently made on the authority of some one else for the words of the editorial comment are copied just as printed and are plainly distinguished both in the editorial and in our letters, and a whole page in The Guardian is taken by the editorial writer to express his warm approval.

Let me quote another paragraph: "But an uncritical belief in Jesus' actual fulfilment of all the conditions of prophecy, in the erotic and frequently gross Songs of Solomon as the Christ and His Church, and in other first century errors, easily paves the way for a profoundly ignorant and irreligious deification of the Man of Nazareth, who, when he spoke of God called Him 'My Father' and 'Your Father'." (These are the words of the literary editor). You will note that we are not concerned with what any one else says of the book, we confine our criticism to official utterances.

Mr. Christie states: "The Dean of Faculty" says "the meaning of the Old Testament" is not a text-book in Victoria. It may be true now, but it would require more than Mr. Christie's unsupported word to prove it. About two years ago it was the cause of great spiritual disquietude on the part of some students who were studying it at Victoria and that is how it was brought to my attention.

In answer to his wilful misstatements of the facts in connection with the tracts issued by the Board of Social Service and Evangelism, let me quote from the first paragraph in Chapter 1: "Nearly every writer of the New Testament looked for the return of the Lord to establish His Kingdom in undisputed and universal sway. Of this there can be no reasonable doubt." Further on, under the heading, "The Hope Disappointed," the tract says: "But they were confronted with the fact that there had been no such return as was promised. The situation could not be ignored — something must be done. Then it was that another presentation of the Gospel was provided. John faced the terrible agony of the Christian soul and he met it fully and frankly. He knew that this was the only way mistakes had to be acknowledged bravely."

It is easy to try and dismiss statements as fabrications if you don't like them and can't disprove them. But they cannot be disposed of that way. Every word in quotation marks published in the tract is a correct quotation and Mr. Christie is up against that fact.

The assertion that Rev. Geo. Jackson was not a minister of the Candian Methodist Church is beside the question. He occupied the pulpit of Sherbourne Street Methodist Church for years and in addition was a Professor in Victoria College at the time his book was under consideration.

It is a painful task to have to prove that a minister of the Presbyterian Church is so careless of his facts and his reputation as the above show him to be; our consolation is that as he is a Unionist he will soon cease to be a Presbyterian altogether.

AFTER ROCKEFELLER.

Claims Money Is Greatest Curse Upon Baptist Church To-day.

NEW YORK, Dec. 2.—(United Press.)—The Rockefeller money is the greatest curse that rests today upon the Baptist denomination Dr. John Roach Straton, fundamentalist pastor of Calvary Baptist Church told the annual meeting of the Baptist Bible union of North America. Rockefeller wealth through the infidel university of Chicago and unbelieving union theological seminary of this city, is doing more to blight us and blast us than all other forces combined, Straton said.

He attacked John D. Rockefeller, juniors address before his bible class at the Park Avenue Baptish Church Sunday, in which Rockefeller said that: "adherence to the literal interpretation of the scriptures is increasingly less possible in view of the discoveries of science When Rockefeller reflects upon the old-fashion-religion and says that this miserable modern thing is better than the religion that made our fathers and mothers saintly, pure and strong, then he is due for a come back. And I am going to reply to his amazig statements next Sunday evening from my pulpit," he declared.

KING PAID SHOT.

Court Uniforms Were Too Expensive For Labor Men.

LONDON, Dec 2. — (United News).—When the Labor Government entered office and a lot of former working men were given posts in the King's household at Buckingham Palace, people wondered what the King would think of it. They have just found out.

The retiring Labor men have revealed that the King, after welcoming them, said he knew that the court uniforms required for formal appearances were expensive and asked if they would mind his paying for them himself.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

BITTERNESS IN CONTROVERSY.

To the Editor

Sir.—One hesitates to retaliate upon an old man of eighty years, even when the attacks are so merciless and persistent as those of Dr. Ephraim Scott upon the leaders of the Presbyterian Church. We have seen nothing more vitriolic or bitter uttered in any controversy than the letters and speeches that have poured from opponents of union during the past two years. As the Union draws to its consummation this stream of gall seems to deepen and darken.

What must the average reader think of these unveiled insults and calumnies uttered by Dr. Scott, Dr. Banks Nelson, Rev. Stuart Parker and others against men elected to high positions in the Presbyterian Church in Canada?

We can all appreciate and sometimes enjoy a good argument, even when it goes against us, for it puts us on our metal when we come to reply but there is no reply to abuse,—only sorrow and shame especially when the abuse comes from one whom many desire to spare on account of his years of service to the Church.

These insults do not only affect the characters and reputations of the present leaders of the Presbyterian Church, but they equally besmirch the names of those who are dead. The anti unionist attack is an attack upon practically all the great leaders in the Presbyterian Church for the past twenty years, if not for the past fifty years. When Dr. Scott and his friends accuse the makers of the Basis of Union of trickery or bad faith they are not attacking the present leaders of the Presbyterian Church, but such men as the late Dr. Warden, Principal Patrick, Principal MacLaren, President oFrrest, Prof. Bryce, Principal Scrimger Dr. Somerville, and such living veterans as Dr. R. P. MacKay, Dr. George M. Milligan, Dr. R Douglas Fraser and Dr DuVal .These are some of the men who prepared the Basis of Union Surely such men are above reproach in the matter of drawing up and historical document that so deeply affects the future of the church in this country.

Canada has produced church leaders as noble and as high-souled as Scotland, and it ill-becomes a man of Dr. Scott's years to accuse his fellow Presbyterian ministers of deliberate "untruth" and the dead leaders of trickery and bad faith.

THEODON GIBSON.

THE THIEF OF BAGDAD

BY ACHMED ABDULLAH

Gradually, as he descended the valley, the mist lifted. It vanished. He crossed a rhododendron forest, purple with clustering blossoms. The sun rays trembled in the leaves like wavering music in a wind of night. Very suddenly, as he turned the corner of a gigantic rock, he saw the valley cleft in two by a shimmering surface; a great lake offering its steaming expanse to the fiery face of the sun. There stretched miles upon miles of flat, monotonous beach with an occasional, grey, dry bush, like a Chinese water-color, silhouetting the far verge above the yellow surf. Farther to the west was a league-long tongue of sand whence slender, tufted jets of palms etched the vacant, azure spaces. There was not a sign of life; not even a zumming of sun-drunk insects, nor a circling and winging of birds; only, a few feet from shore, a very old, white-bearded man was rocking in a frail boat, rowing aimlessly with a single, oval-bladed oar, hardly moving.

Lonely it seemed; terribly lonely; just as if the world had come to an end here, and there was no beyond, no future. The loneliness invaded Ahmed's soul. He needed the consolation, the reassurance of the human voice. So he called out to the old man in the boat:

"Hey, there! Hey, there!"

"Hey, there! Say something, will you? Hey, there—you in the boat—old white-beard! Be thou Moslem or unbeliever, man or ghost?"

Still the man remained silent, kept on aimlessly rowing. And Ahmed, prey to the huge loneliness, sat down near the shore, tired in body and soul. The sky above him blushed rose, trembled, flamed, sank to the booming of oncoming evening. A stray wind stirred and fluttered the watery vapors that sheeted the surface of the lake.

"Oh, Allah!" prayed Ahmed. "Teach me resignation to Fate—Fate which is the breath of Thy Divine Will!"

Sleep overcame him.

When he awakened it was night; night, complete, swathing, pitch-black, with only a single elfin wedge of moonlight that outlined sharply the old man who was still aimlessly rowing his frail boat—seemed not to have moved as much as an inch. Then, all at once, the conviction came to Ahmed that this was the Old Man of the Midnight Sea, and that this lake was none other than the Sea of Resignation to Fate. He rose. Again, cupping his mouth with his hands, he called out to the old man, this time with a peremptory spice in his voice of challenge and impatience:

"Are you the Old Man of the Midnight Sea?"

Slowly the man in the boat turned his head.

"Come over here to me!" cried Ahmed.

"Why should I?"

"Because I need you."

"Many need me. All need me. Only four, since the beginning of Allah's creation, were those who did not need me. One was Moses—on Him peace! The second was the Lord Buddha—on Him peace! The third was Jesus—on Him peace! And the fourth was the Prophet Mohammed—on Him peace!"—and the Old Man turned his back on Ahmed and attended once more to his aimless rowing.

"But"—cried Ahmed, more loudly—"I cannot do without you! I am a poor, human soul in trouble!"

"Why did you not say so the first time?" said the old man, rather illnaturedly. "I am coming." The boat moved, quickly made shore. "Come aboard, Thief of Bagdad!" he invited.

"Oh—" asked Ahmed, surprised, as he stepped over the gunwale. "You know me?"

"Of course I do. I know everybody. Am I not Kismet—Fate itself? Look out!"—as Ahmed shifted in his seat. "Have a care! Do not rock the boat! That has always been the chief trouble with you"—he grumbled—"all your life! You are forever rocking the boat. No, no!" as Ahmed moved again—"do keep quiet! I am having a hard enough time as is, trying to hold this boat steady, with all those uncounted millions of foolish, querulous, pulling, whining mortals always challenging Fate and holding back my boat with their eternal, silly complaints! All right"—as Ahmed sat still—"and now tell me: What exactly do you want?"

"I want the magic silver chest."

"Help yourself to it. I am not keeping you from getting it, am I?"

"Well—but where is it?"

The Old Man of the Midnight Sea pointed at the black, coiling, swirling waters. "Down there!" he said.

Ahmed leaned over the side of the boat and looked.

"I cannot see a thing," he replied.

"Naturally not. The box is a hundred fathoms deep—at the very bottom of the lake."

"Then—how can I get it?"

"You will have to dive for it. You will have to jump into the Sea of Resignation to Fate."

Ahmed gave a little involuntary shudder; and the Old Man of the Midnight Sea took compassion on him.

"Thief of Bagdad," he said, "be not afraid. Everything, sooner or later, must go down into the waters of this lake. All men and women and children—even the unborn children. The moon goes down there every morning when it is waning, and the sun every night when it has set on earth. At the bottom of the lake you will find a cave—a cave made of the shimmering, opal tears of man's grief, with windows made of the milk-white crystals and bright-green emeralds of man's laughter, and a gleaming red door, like an immense ruby, made of the heart's blood of all those who have loved and who have suffered and sacrificed greatly for the sake of their love. If your own love for Zobeid be great enough, your resignation to God's will sincere enough, you will find this door. You will open it. And, beyond the threshold, you will see the magic silver box."

What does the box contain?" demanded Ahmed.

"A very precious treasure. The most precious treasure in the world. Some men call it happiness. But emperors, fools, and wise men call it honor. It is the same thing. By the way," he added as Ahmed stood up, about to dive into the lake—"the magic box is wrapped in the Cloak of Invisibility. If I were you I would bring the cloak along, too. It will come in handy in your future adventures."

"How do you know?" asked Ahmed.

"Naturally I know, O fool!" chuckled the old man. "Did I not tell you that I am Kismet itself."

"I beg your pardon," Ahmed murmured, crestfallen but polite; and, the next second, he curved into the water in an audacious leap.

A splash—circles widening, breaking dissolving—smoothness and indifference again where the waters closed over him—and down there, as he bored his way head foremost through the hundred fathoms, a myriad flecks of glittering gold.

P.C.I. WING LINE LOOKED STRONG

But Hamilton Did Not Highly Rate the Work of the Back Division.

COMMENT ON GAME.

The following is quoted from the Hamilton Spectator's story of the P.C.I., H.C.I. rugby game Saturday

Peterboro had never played the locals before and considerable mystery was attached to their appearance. Reports that didn't tell a great deal were heard from time to time during the season and it was the popular idea that they would be a pretty tough nut to crack. The three thousand or so odd fans that turned out to see the struggle were naturally disappointed when the easterners showed themselves to be hopelessly outclassed.

It was plain to be seen that they were at a loss to cope with Collegiate's speedy breakaways and with the backs going great guns they were soon left in the rear. Whoever the mentor of the Petes' team is ,it's a cinch he omitted one mighty important factor in his coaching—proper tackling. Had the visitors even the semblance of an idea of how to bring a ball carrier down they would have put the clamps on many of those senastional Red and Black dashes around the end for long gains. As it was they preferred to either spear an opposing player by the ear or else grab him around the waist and try to wrestle him to earth. Many fans thought the high tackles deliberate, but they really weren't. They were nothing more than real "honest-to-crackey" Peterboro tackles. The boys played clean football and there wasn't a dirty one in the dozen.

Another weak spoke in the easterners' wheel was the back division With the exception of Bookhout, who turned out to be a line plunger of no mean ability, the backs were a fizzle, and certainly no match for either the Collegiate regulars or subs. Cole, who did the most of the booting, had nothing whatever on his toe . Most of the time his kicks spun through the air a few feet from the ground or went into touch . A steady west wind was blowing straight across the field and Cole lacked the force to send kicks through it.

All of the backs were uncertain of their catches and ran awkwardly up to haul down the champions' boots Bounding balls were evidently some thing new on the bill of fare to them and, rather than take a chance, they stood still until the pigskin became stationary and then picked it up to be dropped in their tracks by the five or six husky tacklers that were lolling about waiting for work. It's hard to say what their running would be like, because the lads didn't get a chance to side-step the opposing tacklers long enough to have a good sprint.

The line—well that's a different story. Collegiate didn't have any easy time when they bunted up against the bone-crushing warriors that faced 'em. Mr. Pogue, quarter-back for the Petes, didn't learn the game from the book of rules on the trip down here. He gave his youthful noodle plenty of exercise and pulled some wicked stuff which Collegiate was fortunately able to handle. Peterboro had some sweet plungers on that line-up. Rye, the captain of the outfit, Bookhout, Yelland and Pogue hit and hit hard and plenty in every quarter in the old approved style of head down. A few neat plays were pulled, but they didn't mean anything when the back field was slopping around in a dazed manner.

And another thing about that line—it didn't take it long to get hepped up to Hamilton's plays. Once the stage fright passed off, the bruisers forged through and broke up many of Collegiates' pet stunts for gaining yards. Even the hefty Mr. Small found difficulty in getting away with his customary smashes. From the press box it looked as though Peterboro did more than U.T.S. on the line. Several times in the last half the Petes started a yard -collecting rampage and worked some snappy interference. Everybody agreed they were no slouches in that respect. Next year let us hope that Peterboro will develop a back division and take a few evenings a week off and brush up on the tackling. If they do, they won't play a semi-final game at the end of a 39 to 1 score. End runs kept 'em guessing, too. Somehow they couldnt' fathom that part at all.

THANK GOD FOR RUGBY VICTORY

Westpoint Army Team Pulled Off Helmets and Stood With Bared Heads.

PLAY THE GAME.

WESTPOINT, N.Y., Dec. 1.—(United Press.)—The action of the victorious army team in pulling off their helmets and standing with bowed heads immediately after defeating their ancient rivals from Annapolis was explained by Ed. Garbisch in his valedictory speech as football captain.

"We have prayed before every game this season not for victory but that we might acquit ourselves like men. At the conclusion of Saturday's game, when I think our prayers were answered, we jerked off our helmet sand thanked God fervently for the victory."

MAY INSURE PLAYERS.

American Association Discusses Rlanket Plan For Clubs.

HARTFORD, Conn., Dec. 1.—The American Association at its annual meeting today adopted its 1925 schedule, discussed a blanket insurance plan fur its players and listened to a report of its 1924 season which proves to be the best in the history of the league.

The blanket insurance plan, while not definitely adopted, was thoroughly discussed by the magnates Heretofore the clubs have insured their players individually but the cost of such insurance, it was claimed can be materially reduced by the adoption of the blanket plan This insurance will cover injury only.

WILLIAM EASSON WILL HEAD O.H.A.

J. P. Bond, of Peterborough, Is Nominee For Executive With Nine Others.

SOME ACCLAMATIONS.

TORONTO, Dec. 1.—(Canadian Press.)—William Easson, of Stratford, Ont., becomes President of the Ontario Hockey Association for the ensuing year.

With the retirement of W. A. Fry, of Dunnville, Ont., and closing of nominations on Saturday without opposition to Mr. Easson's election, the latter automatically goes up from the vice-presidency.

Geo. B. McKay, of Kitchener, second vice-president, becomes first vice-pres., also by acclamation. Both new officers are former players.

The annual convention of the association will be held here next Saturday.

Other officers of the O.H.A. elected by acclamation include W. A. Hewitt, of Toronto to the secretaryship.

There are ten nominees for four vacant positions on the executive. Of these ten, J. P. Bond, of Peterborough, Frank Hyde of Woodstock and Wylie Wilkinson of Galt, are at present members. The new nominees are E. Bradley, Oshawa, G. S. Dudley, Midland, R. Horning, Palmerston, T. W. Jameson, Owen Sound, J. M. Mitchell, Collingwood, W. P. Robb, Dunnville, and H. C. Snyder, Brampton.

COBOURG CURLERS WAITING FOR ICE

W. F. Griffis Will Head Fast Colborne Rinks This Season.

COBOURG, Dec. 2.—The curling clubs in the lakefront district are getting ready for the "roarin' game" and as soon as seasonable weather brings the ice there will be something doing. Cobourg and Colborne curlers had some rare games last winter to decide the custodianship of the Simmons Cup and now Colborne has had its annual meeting, and will soon be all lined up for another season.

The officers of the Colborne Club are:

President—W. F. Griffis.
Vice-Pres.—H. J. Mayhew,
Sec.-Treas.—C. H. Byers.
Tankard skips—Ira Edwards and H. S. Fowler.
District skips—H. J. Mayhew and Dr. J. Archer Brown.

A repair committee has also been appointed consisting of James Coyle, Ira Edwards, W. F. Griffis, and an entertainment committee, composed of Sam D. Dudley, J. D. Mayhew, H. D. Vanderwort. The club has reorganized with much enthusiasm and expects to have a large number of members.

SPORTS OF ALL SORTS

Jack Dempsey has promised to visit Cleveland to engage in an exhibition for ex-service men.

Derrill Pratt, Detroit second baseman, may retire from the big show for college work as baseball coach.

"Dazzy" Vance keeps in shape in the north during the winter by bowling, but shifts to golf when he goes south.

Crowley, Notre Dame's brilliant halfback, answers to the nickname of "Sleepy." Princeton and the Army take exceptions.

Jim Corbett writes that in his opinion Peter Jackson was the greatest heavyweight of all time, not barring Dempsey.

Inability to field his position, particularly the handling of bunts,keeps Pitcher Harris of the Athletics from being a star. He has the stuff.

Despite John McGraw's opinion, Travis Jackson is not the best shortstop in the game. He's far too erratic to be so classed.

Coaches using the huddle system are strong for it over the old method of calling signals. More accurate, they claim.

Coaching a major college football team is now a precarious job. The big overhead of the various stadiums makes it necessary to turn out a winner.

BELL TELEPHONE TAKE TWO FROM DENTISTS

The Bell Telephone took two out of three from the Dentists in the Mercantile Five Pin League at the Water Street Alleys last night. The Dentists were badly handicapped with a dummy score. Very small scores were rolled in last night's game to what is usually rolled in the Mercantile League. The Telephones two victories last night put them up near the top of the heap.

Dr. Cameron was high man of the evening for three games with a score of 509, while Dick Lush was next with 503. Dr. Buchanan had the high single, an even 200.

EXAMINER LADIES' LEAGUE.

Last night in the Examiner Ladies League, the Excels took two out of three from the Swastikas. The Excels were considerably strengthened by the presence of Bobbie Baker, who coaches the Examiner Ladies' Mercantile team. At that he bowled very poorly and the Swastikas completed swamped the Excels in the last game.

Miss W. Cadd had the high three games of the evening with a nice score of 385. Miss M. Collins was next with 380, and Miss P. Robison had the high single of 162.

BELMONT CLUB LEAGUE

Last night at the Water Street Alleys in the Belmont Club League eight teams were in action. Some great scores were rolled and there were plenty of the bowlers well over the 500 mark for three games. A good bunch of single scores were well over 200, and on the whole a great night's rolling was turned in.

Jackson was hight man of the evening with a nice score of 595 for three games. Buchanan was next in line with 592 (a far better score than he rolled for the Dentists in the Mercantile League game) and Williamson came next with 581 and Burgess had 573. There were a lot more over 500 and they can be noticed in the scores below. Jackson had the high single of 238 with Buchanan only eight pins behind with 230.

Harry Cressman has a lot of trouble trying to get his team out and last night he again had to take two dummies, with the result that he dropped three straight.

The Belmont League is going along at a smooth pace now and the boys are getting lots of fun out of bowling, besides finding it great exercise.

MIKEL RE-ELECTED.

BELLEVILLE, Ont., Dec. 2.—(Canadian Press). — William C. Mikel, K.C., was re-elected Mayor of Belleville, yesterday by a plurality of over 1,100 over his three opponents and about 1,600 over his nearest opponent. The total vote was under 3,000 less than half polled in the recent by-election. Daylight saving was defeated by over three to one.

DOPE PEDDLER CAUGHT

court and no charge was laid against you?" "No, sir."

Mr. Justice Coderre: "Did you see Rochleau and Belanger before you left the house?" "Yes, I was put out by them."

Mr. Lanctot: "And you never paid the $500?" "No."

Witness declared he had told his story to Mr. Calder, the crown prosecutor, about a week after the incident. He said Dr. Roch and Tommy Campeau had gone with him to the house and waited outside in his (Blurton's) car. He had explained to Dr. Roch why he had been delayed "Roch was associated with me in the expenses and, therefore, he had to know," added the witness.

Blurton said he had changed his address a few times, and come to town very little after the incident. He had sent a letter addressed to both Rochlean and Belanger telling them that he had not got the money to pay with, but when he had it he would get in touch with them. He had sent the letter, which did not give his address, to the police station by another man who he believed could be produced.

Blurton said he had never got an answer nor heard anything from Rochleau and Belanger.

Doctor Told Prosecutor

Dr. Roch was with him when he visited Mr. Calder, continued the witness. In fact, it was Dr. Roch who had told Mr. Calder about the affair. Mr. Calder had said he did not think he could do anything in the matter.

Witness said he had seen Kid Baker standing with Rocheleau and Belanger in the North Eastern.

"And you have never paid any protection beyond this " "I didn't known any policemen."

Witness said drugs were usually sold on the streets, the money being paid in advance and the drugs delivered by appointment later.

Mr. Lanctot: "In Montreal?" "Not recently."

In cross-examination, it was stated that Dr. Foch was now serving a terms of three years in the penitentiary. Campeau, Blurton declared, was in the same business. Witness admitted he took dope himself.

Mr. Gagnon: "Did not Mr. Calder say that he would refer the matter to the government police or something of the kind?" "He might have said something like that. Anyway we were to leave the matter in his hands, and would hear from him later. He was busy with the Delorme case at the time." Witness added that he had never heard any more of the matter.

Says Constable Led Force

T. Campeau, investigator, then took the stand and declared he had known Eddie Baker for five or six years and had seen him at the North Eastern Lunch particularly after boxing matches. He had also seen Baker with Belanger at the corner of St. Urbain and Ontario streets a few weeks ago, and they had appeared to hide their faces.

Witness declared Baker had been dealing in drugs for years, his centre of activitiy being at the corner of St. Catharine and Clarke streets, where he supplied peddlers. He had seen Baker take money from peddlers on several occasions. The peddlers would then go to Baker's car and take the drugs out of a pocket on the inside of the door of the car.

Witness declared the club at 412 St. Lawrence boulevard, run by a man named Roonis, was better known as the "C.P.R." by the under world. It was a sort of underworld social club, where gamblers, robbers and people of the underworld generally met. So far as he knew no drug business was carried on there but people would telephone to Baker there and he would then go out and deliver dope to them.

Answering a question by the commisioner, witness said Constables Belanger and Rocheleau were well known among the drug addicts and peddlers of the district, and they invariably move off when they see the two policemen coming.

The North Eastern Lunch on St. Catharine street, near Clarke, was a much nicer place now than it used to be, he said. At one time it was a terrible place, with lots of drug addicts hanging around it.

Has Civil Action Pending

Cross-examined by Oscar Gagnon he said he was an investigator, but he had no office. When Gonzague Savard had the Dominion Detective Agency, witness was attached to that office. He had a civil action at present pending against the city. Sgt. Gauvin and the proprietor of the North Eastern Lunch for $1,000.

The commissioner asked Mr. Gagnon what he was getting for bringing this matter up and the lawyer said he was dealing with the assertions made regarding the North Eastern Lunch.

"We can bring witnesses to say much worse things than that about the North Eastern Lunch,' 'remarked Mr. Justice Coderre, who nevertheless allowed the line of questioning.

Witness explained that the sergeant and a constable had ordered him out of the restaurant and as he refused to go he had put him out by force. There were about seventy five drug addicts in the place at that time. He did not know that "Kid" Baker had called him a stool pigeon and he certainly was not.

J. H. Francoeur next took the stand and told how, when acting as campaign manager to Ald. Dr. Quintal at the last civic election he had been seized by Oscar Gignac and a number of the latter's henchmen, thrown into an automobile and taken to police headquarters, where they held him by force until such time as Gignac could make out a warrant for his arrest and have him put in the cells. He was released about eleven o'clock the same evening.

Witness declared that as he was leaving a polling station Oscar Gignac had jumped on him and called to his friends to help him. Witness had then been bundled into a car and driven to police headquarters, where he had appealed to Inspector Roberts for protection against "these apaches." The inspector spoke to Gignac, who then disappeared. As witness came out of the detective office he heard someone saying, "Gignac is a baby stealer; that is the second one he had taken away today." Next morning a complaint had been laid against him, but he was able to prove that it was entirely groundless.

WOMEN'S ART ASSOCIATION

At the meeting of the Women's Art Association, held in the studio of the Conservatory of Music on Saturday afternoon, an interesting address was given by Mr. F D. Kerr, K.C. on the hospitality shown the members of the Canadian and American Bar Association on their visit to England and France last summer, as guests of the British Bar Association, at a convention of English-Speaking lawyers. Five hundred Canadian and thirty-five hundred American lawyers with their wives, attended the gathering.

They were greeted on landing at Southampton by the Lord Mayor, in his robes of office, and made most welcome. Mr Kerr spoke of the exceeding good will of the British judges and lawyers towards the members of the bar from Canada and the United States. Before the American group arrived, the Canadians and their wives were entertained at historic Lincoln's Inn. It is here that the toast to "The King" is always honored while sitting, a custom dating from a time when Charles Second was Prince of Wales. At a certain dinner, he felt unable to stand, and so naively proposed that the company remain seated. There also at every dinner four vacant places are set, as though waiting for those absent members who have never returned from the Great War.

An important Thanksgiving service was held in Westminister Abbey, at which the historic edifice was filled to overflowing and there among the tombs of the world's great men they saw the burial place of one whose grave bears no name and who represents all the brothers, fathers and husbands who made the great sacrifice.

Perhaps the most interesting function to the ladies at least was a reception at Buckingham Palace given by their majesties. There was also a reception given by the Archbishop of Canterbury at his palace and one at Oxford given by Sir John Simon.

In France, the hospitality shown was equally spontaneous and the members were guests of the president of France and were also entertained at a reception at the Elysee and at beautiful, historic Versailles.

During the afternoon, vocal solos in splendid voice were given by Mr. Douglas Carlisle, who sang the "Lute Player" and "The Bells of Saint Mary's," with accompaniments by Mr. Chas Peaker.

Hostesses for the occasion were: Mrs. A. E. Sherwood and Mrs. A. Stevenson.

FIREMEN CALLED OUT FOUR TIMES

False Alarms Last Night — Fire Chief on Trail of Culprits.

A large car carrying two or more occupants, who had nothing much to do, spent two hours last night travelling from one end of the city to the other pulling fire boxes, either in an effort to see some of the firemen break their necks in the hurried flight to the boxes, or to cause a little excitement for themselves.

Four boxes were pulled within one hour and forty-one minutes, and all the boxes were at the outskirts of the city.

The first false alarm was sent in at 10.06 p.m., when box 57 at the corner of Concession and Hazlett Sts., in East City, was pulled. The firemen dashed to the scene expecting to find a real fire, but much to their surprise, there was no one at the box or in sight when they reached it. Thinking that some children had sent in the false alarm they returned to the station, but when box 48, at the corner of Hilliard and Water streets, near the Auburn mills, was pulled at 10.31, they expected that it was another false alarm, but nevertheless the firemen did their duty, and answered the call. They made an investigation here and found that the excitement seekers were travelling in a car, and that it was no small children that were doing the mischief, for a man's track was found from the car tracks on the road to the box and back.

Eight minutes later they were on their way to Box 113 on Romaine street, between Park street and Monaghan Road, but here they found the same tracks as they did in the north end of the city.

Before they had returned to the fire hall box 19, on the corner of Park and Princess streets, a few blocks from box 113 was pulled and the other shift who were waiting at the station, sped to this box.

Chief Gimblett told the Examiner to-day that his opinion of the men who sent in the alarms was, "that they were either drunk or crazy, for no man in his right senses would do such a trick.

A person found guilty of this act, is liable to a fine of $50 for every box he pulled and as much as 6 months in jail.

The police were notified last night and with Chef Gimblett they are working on he case. A reward of $25 will be given by the city to any person who will give information that will lead to the arrest of the prowlers.

HELD A BANQUET.

Interesting Programme Provided for the Young Folks.

(Contributed)

A banquet of the young people of Murray street Baptist Church was held in the church parlors last evening, when one hundred and thirty-three of the younger members of the church sat down to the tables, and were served by the older members. The banquet was a very happy affair and throughly enjoyed by all present. Community singing was a feature and was led by Graham Eastwood.

Toasts to "Our Country", "Our Church", "Our Guest," and "Our B.Y.P.U." were proposed and responded to in entertaining fashion by the following: Percy Johnson, Clara Doughty, Marjorie Stenton, Dr. C. W. Rose, Alvin Yelland, Margaret Eastwood, Roy White and Roland Doughty.

An enjoyable musical programme included vocal solos by Miss Lillian Eastwood and Dr. S. J. Graham and a pianoforte selection by Miss Grace Read.

Mr. Fred Reynolds of Brockville, Inter-Provincial Secretary and Treasurer of the B.Y.P.U. gave an address on "The Commandments' which will be long remembered. Mr. Reynolds is a wide awake business man and is always welcome to Murray Street Church.

Mr. J. W. Richman, president of the B.Y.P.U., presided with much ability. Probably there are few men in the province better qualified to lead successfully on an occasion of this sort and Murray Street Church considers itself fortunate in the accession to its list of workers of Mr. and Mrs. Richman, who recently came to Peterboro from St. Catharines, Ont.

Roy White, chairman of the Social Committee and Miss Evelyn Rose, chairman of the Refreshment Committee, with their energetic assistants deserve praise for the notable success of the banquet.

BRIGHTON MAN SHOT TO DEATH

Body of George Walt, Who Has Been Missing Since Sunday Last, Found To-day.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT.

BRIGHTON, Dec. 2.—The body of George Walt, of Brighton, who was last seen on Sunday morning about 9 o'clock, was found this morning by Clinton C. Pickle, near the latter's barn on Sand Street.

Mr. Pickle stumbled on the body while working near his barn.

A bullet hole was found in Walt's stomach, and it is thought by the authorities that the gun which he was carrying accidentally discharged when he was getting over a fence near where the body was found.

After being shot he fell off the fence and rolled down a bank into a ravine.

When found the body was facing downward.

The gun which he was carrying was a borrowed one, and was known to be a dangerous weapon.

Coroner F. M. Dure and Provincial Constable T. W. Cousans were at the scene of the accident this morning, and after making an investigation had the body removed to the undertaking parlors of B. E. Britnell, where an inquest will be held.

When Walt was last seen, he was carrying a rifle and was proceeding in the direction of Macklam's Woods which contains about 1,000 acres of densely wooded land, and it was believed since that he was lost.

The pupils of the Brighton High School set out to look for their companion, but without result, until this morning, when his dead body was discovered.

BANDIT SOLD OUT.

Montreal Crook Goes To Prison For Life—Pleaded Guilty.

MONTREAL, Dec. 2.—(Canadian Press.) — Life imprisonment was the sentence imposed this morning on Adam Parillo by Justice Wilson, Parillo recently pleaded guilty to manslaughter in connection with the Bank of Hochelaga hold-up and murder of Henri Cleroux, collection car driver, for whose death four men were hanged and others sent to penitentiary for life. The charge of manslaughter was made against him following an undertaking given on behalf of the province by Crown Prosecutor R. L. Calder, when Parillo was arrested in Bridgeport, Conn., and agreed to give certain information for prosecution of other bandits. In sentencing Parillo, His Lordship said: "I don't know any words of mine which may reach your soul, as you don't seem to have any. Your life has been an uninterrupted series of crime. You would have gone with others who paid the death penalty except for dire necessity with which the Crown was faced of bargaining with you to get after your accomplices. You squealed and you sold your comrades."

GIBBS ACQUITTED IN LIQUOR CHARGE

Magistrate Declares He Is Entitled to Benefit of Doubt Raised By Evidence.

Harold Gibbs, charged under section 41 of the O.T.A. with having liquor in his possession illegally, was to-day acquitted by Magistrate O. A. Langley in a judgment in which His Worship remarked that the case against the accused was very weak.

Gibbs, who was taken by Provincial Constable N. Maker and License Inspector Joseph Stewart at the same time that a raid was made on premises owned by James Akey and operated by W. Eastland, declared that the liquor was placed in his car without his knowledge or consent. He was represented on trial by V. J. McElderry, while the prosecution was taken by J. F. Strickland.

Magistrate Langley remarked that the only evidence against Gibbs was that of finding two cartons of beer in his car on property owned by Akey and near a building occupied by Eastland. Of the two cartons, each containing twelve bottles, one bottle was analyzed and shown to be beyond the strength approved for sale under the O.T.A. license. There was no proof of ownership of the beer in Gibbs or anyone else, and no proof as to how it came in the car.

In defense, William Eastland swears that he put the beer in the car, and Gibbs swears he did not know it was there and that it was not there when he left his car to go to the buildings. In fact, he swears he did not know it was there until he was called by Inspector Stewart Akey also swears it was not in the car when he left it.

The car was standing alone, His Worship continued, and the opportunity for someone to put the beer there was existing all the time. East land had beer in the house, similar to this beer, and he had the key to the room where it was kept. He swears he took the beer and put it in the car.

These three witnesses all deny that Gibbs knew of the presence of the beer, and there is sufficient reasonable doubt laid to entitle Gibbs to the benefit of the doubt.

The evidence of the defense is not very satisfactory, but there being that possibility of Eastland's putting the beer in the car, just as he says, Gibbs is entitled to acquittal, and the case is dismissed.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS IN 'THE MAGIC ROPE,' IN 'THE THIEF OF BAGDAD, GRAND, STARTING MONDAY, DEC. 1ST.

THEATRES

"THE THIEF OF BAGDAD.

One of the most remarkable pictures seen here in many moons is the new Fairbanks production at the Grand Opera House, "The Thief of Bagdad." Distinctly different, it is one of those pictures that live in the memory and appear more out of the ordinary when the presentation is completed than just at the moment of watching its unfolding. Absolutely and utterly fantastic and impossible, there is still an element of realism injected into its whimsical situations by reason of the art of the "Thief" himself.

Douglas Fairbanks is supreme in this picture, but he does not dominate it to satiety. He makes the wheels go 'round. The superabundant vitality that may have seemed just a little too marked in other pictures that featured Fairbanks is just what is needed to put over "The Thief of Bagdad." Probably never in his career has the athletic star been cast in a role that fitted him like a glove. Bold, fearless, vital, he gives a superb characterization of the mocking thief whose rude nature is changed by love.

"Happiness must be earned" is the theme of the big picture. It is hard in the space of a brief review to describe adequately such a production. To say that the directors have spared no pains in its presentation gives little idea of the wealth of detail, the magnificence of the backgrounds the stupendous art of "The Thief of Bagdad." All the colorful, imaginary splendor of "The Arabian Nights' Entertainment" must have been ransacked to make this picture. In the vivid, clear light of the super-excellent photography that abounds in its make-up, the glorious fantasy of Arabian Nights' tales are spun out to the last extraordinary detail, always around the vital figure of the thief and the romantic loveliness of the Princess Zobeiad, his high-born lady-love.

Fairy tale stories come to life in "The Thief of Bagdad." All the dreamy impossibilities of story-book fiction are here. Here is the magic flying carpet, sailing through boundless ether with the three haughty Princes borne on the winds to the palace of the Caliph; here is the hero on his galloping white horse, winging its way through the air over land and sea; here is a monstrous living dragon, belching fire and smoke, and enormous bats flying from secret caverns; here is a petrified man in the Enchanted Garden slowly turning to flesh before one's eyes and slowly turning back to his enchanted state; here is an undersea crystal city where the hero battles with a devilfish, and, above all, here in pictures is the Cloak of Invisibility, the shadowy cone that darts up staircases aand takes the Princess from her bewildered suitors. Out from the pages of fairy tale books springs the hero, to summon from thin air a living, breathing army.

The gorgeousness of some of the settings for this picture are but a detail in its making. The caravan series of the three Princes are marvellous exhibitions of the lengths to which modern picture-producers go in rounding out the scenic beauty of their stories. Nothing out of a fairy tale book could commence to compare with the backgrounds of "The Thief of Bagdad." For sheer, unbelievable imagery and splendor it could not be surpassed. To miss seeing it is to miss an absolutely perfect piece of fantastic imagery, carried to the very last limits yet conceived by picture producers. New effects never yet witnessed on the screen are in this picture, and possibly no other production yet devised could screen them with such effect. Still, while the fairy-tale atmosphere is necessary for such magic happenings, the love story of Ahmed and the Caliph's daughter is as vital and compelling as any modern presentation of life in a tenement flat.

The keynote of "The Thief of Bagdad" is sounded in its brief prologue, the stage set with a mosque, the time the hour of prayer, a white-robed muezzin issuing from the minaret to call the faithful to devotions with his droning "Allah akbar, Allah akbar" (God is great). The odor of incense floats over the house as the picture opens, there is a Mohammedan musician in the lobby playing on the Oriental 'out,' and there is a wonderful orchestra, whose music sets the note for the production. Designed by Willie Pogany, one of the foremost mural and decorative painters of modern New York, the prologue setting makes a fitting opening for a wonderful picture. Turkish coffee in tiny cups is served during an intermission.

The supporting cast is all that could be desired. Although most of the minor characters are unfamiliar faces, they are splendid actors. Outstanding is, of course, the figure of Fairbanks, the lovely princess is a graceful foil for his strength, the familiar face of Anna May Wong is here in the treacherous Mongol Slave, Snitz Edwards is the Bird of Evil and So-Jin is the villain of the piece, the hateful Mongol Prince.

AT THE REGENT.

With a tender melody as its theme, harmony in its pictorial setting, and the splendid acting of Jane Novak as its topmost note, "The Lullaby," a Chester Bennett production which played at the Regent Theatre, proved to be a remarkable symphony of life portrayed in a truly masterful style by a cast of real artists.

As in all great musical creations, drawing the comparison farther, there is discord—but this only served to bring forth the beauty of the aria—a theme of consuming devotion and the final triumph of mother love.

Starting in a light, sparkling, jubilant tone, such as that carried by the string instruments in a great orchestra, the play runs gaily along until suddenly, with a threatening blare, the deep, brass notes of the French horns portends evil. Miss Novak, as the little Italian bride of a few months, and her good-natured devoted husband, played by Robert Anderson, carry a melody as it skips joyfully along with Fred Malatesta, as Tony, a wolf in disguise, takes the ominous solo, which swells to a crescendo, drowning out the tender lullaby. For a while, chaos reigns, the deep notes predominating. Then, gradually, the lullaby struggles to be heard, becomes louder and louder as the horns recede, and in a final swelling chorus, emerges triumphant in a splendid melodious finish.

"The Lullaby" must have been a good play for which to write the orchestration, for its movement is very similar to that of a great overture, Chester Bennett, its creator, should be called the "Wagner of the screen." He is not only a director, he is a composer.

Its great cast, including besides Miss Novak and Anderson, Otis Harlan, Fred Esmelton, Lydia Yeaman Titus and many others who contributed fine performances.

AT THE ROYAL.

"HOLD YOUR BREATH" SUPREME COMEDY THRILLER

Many Well-Known Comedians in "Hold Your Breath," a Breezy Story.

"A wonderful comedy cast" is the phrase used in the billing of "Hold Your Breath," the new Al Christie feature at the Royal Theatre, and that's exactly what it is. There's a collection of comedians and character players that would make a musical comedy director green with envy.

Dainty little Dorothy Devore has the leading feminine role. She has more pep than almost any other comedienne on the screen. While she has starred in many Christie comedies and played feminine leads in features this is her first comedy-drama. Judging by her work in this, there is no saying how far she may go in this field for which she is particularly fitted by personality and talent.

Walter Hiers of the generous proportions and jovial smile, plays the good-natured fiancee. Tully Marshall Jimmie Harrison, Jimmie Adams, Priscilla Bonner and Lincoln Plumer have other important parts. Comedy bits are contributed by Patricia Palmer, Rosa Gore, Jay Betasco, George Pierce, Victor Rodman, Budd Fine, Eddie Baker and Douglas Carter.

The story is a fast-moving tale of a girl who endeavours to hold down her brother's reportorial job while he is ill. There are plenty of thrills as well as an abundance of clean comedy. Some praise should go to Director Scott Sidney for his skill in making comedians of the monkey and other animals in the film.

LARRY SEMON AND LIGE CONNELLY AT THE ROYAL THEATRE

The program at the Royal to-day might be called an all comedy bill.. Larry Semon in "No Wedding Bells" and Lige Connelly in "Oh What a Night". Two excellent shorter comedies in addition to "Hold Your Breath" the big Christie thriller.

CELEBRATED CAST IN "40 HORSE HAWKINS"

Anne Cornwall, Helen Holmes and Richard Tucker with Hoot Gibson

Three veteran screen favorites will be seen in support of Hoot Gibson in "40 Horse Hawkins," Gibson production, which comes to the Royal Theatre. Thursday, Anne Cornwall, Helen Holmes and Richard Tucker, and all of them had speaking stage experience.

The significance of the last assertion is realized when it becomes known that in "40 Horse Hawkins" these three are east in the part of speaking stage actors.

The story was written for Gibson by Director Edward Sedgwick and Raymond L. Schrock. Gibson is cast as stage-manager, property-man and all other jobs in a village theatre to which comes one of the old time road companies of the "East Lynne" days.

There was an especially constructed stage with a crude contrivance of the small town theatre of twenty years ago and on this the cast simulated cold cruelty, and grief, while the camera gaound on.

Then the action is moved to New York, where there is another stage performance. Here the country stage-manager has become a "supe," and as such proves that the "hero always triumphs."

AT THE CAPITOL.

Rudolph Valentino is back again to the silver screen. Those who have mourned his absence have a splendid opportunity to see him, as romantic and as handsome as ever, in his latest release, "Monsieur Beaucaire," filmed from Booth Tarkington's charming story, now showing at the Capitol Theatre.

The popular star has not suffered by his vacation. He is as interesting as always, but he has lost that subtle something or other that made him almost irresistible in previous pictures. Valentino always had the centre of the picture, but he did not take it with such assurance. He withdrew occasionally into the background and let someone else have a momentary say. In "Monsieur Beaucaire" he is first, last and all the time. He is absolutely 'it' and no one else has a look in. Undeniably he acts to perfection, however, even if he does become a trifle wearisome in his glittering omnipresence.

It is a quaint and lovely presentation with gorgeous costuming, of the artificial age when men strutted in powder and patches and curled perukes and satin raiment, when they fought to the death for a lady's favor and excelled in stiff, deep bows that suited admirably the low curtsies of their fair companions, whose fluttering fans, demure looks and gowns with huge panniers formed a fitting accompaniment to the airs and graces of their admirers.

The exotic atmosphere of the French court of Louis Fifteenth surrounds Valentino, portrayed as Louis Phillippe de Bourbon, Duc de Chartres, cousin of the King, and admirer of the reigning favorite, the Marquise de Pompadour, with her little white poodle, and the famous headdress that held its vogue for many a long year, in modern times. The Duke, however becomes enamored of the haughty Princess Henrietta, and, angered at the lady's condemnation of him as a philandering "King of Hearts," insults the Pompadour, and earns banishment from the French court and kingdom.

To the English watering place of Bath he departs and masquerades as Monsieur Beaucaire, the barber of his friend Mirepoix. Here adventures fall upon him thick and fast, he engages in sword encounters that always find him a victor and he falls in love with the proud Belle of Bath, the Lady Mary Carlisle. The facility in love-making which made Valentino in his former screen years the idol of feminine watchers is as apparent as ever, but the handsome Prince comes a cropper when the Lady Mary rebuffs him as a low-born aspirant for her hand.

But nothing can dampen for long the resilient spirit of the French prince. His star once mores rises to the ascendant, and he departs from Bath in a haze of glory.

"Monsieur Beaucaire" is one of those entertaining, artistically produced pictures that make an admirable evening's entertainment. It is like the frosting on a big cake, with Valentino the glittering ornament in the centre.

FEW COUNCILLORS WILL FAIL TO RUN

All of 18 Reeves and Deputies in Peterborough County Would Remain.

All of Peterborough County's eighteen councillors are laying plans to run for re-election for 1925, so far as is known. No one has expressed a determination to forsake his seat in the Council Chamber voluntarily, although several are free to admit that they may be forcibly evicted.

It all depends upon who opposes them in the race for the reeveships of the different townships, and while nearly all appreciate a good election battle there are some who look forward to acclamation.

Reeve W. E. Packenham, who is moving from the village of Norwood to its outswirts in Asphodel, has almost decided to submit to the desires of the people of the village that he again represent it in the County Council. He may do this under the new regulations, so long as he lives within a mile of its bounds and retains property assessed for $50 or more in the village There will be no trouble on either score in Reeve Peckenham's case should he consider the importunities of his many admirers in the village.

The following is a list of the present Reeves and Deputy Reeves representing the townships and villages on the County Council, with the number of years each has served in the position:

Martin P. Coughlin, warden, Reeve of Douro, 6 years; John Scott, reeve of Asphodel, 6 years; J. F. Breckenbridge, reeve of Belmont and Methuen, 3 years; D. Brown, reeve of Burleigh and Anstruther 3 years; R. Scott reeve of Chandos 3 years; J. Hawthorne reeve of Drummer 1 year; Ed Corkery reeve of Ennismore 3 years; John Clark reeve of Galway and Cavendish 8 years; A. Wilson, reeve of Horvey, 1 year; H. B. Rye, reeve of North Monaghan, 4 years; Morley Smithson, reeve of Otonabee, 1 year; W. A. Anderson, deputy reeve of Otonabee. 9 years; Bert Middleton, reeve of Smith, 5 years; W. Brown, deputy reeve of Smith, 5 years; W. T Curtis, reeve of Havelock, 1 year; W. E. Packenham, reeve of Norwood, 2 years; J. C. Strickland, reeve of Lakefield, 4 years; R. H. Lillico, deputy reeve of North Monaghan, 4 years.

KEW BEACH MINISTER WILL STAND BY UNION

Rev. J. A. Cranston Makes Announcement at the Morning Services.

TORONTO, Dec. 2.—Rev. J. A. Cranston, pastor of Kew Beach Presbyterian Church, announced himself on the Unionist side in the discussion of Church Union, at the morning service Sunday.

The decision was heard by an unusually large congregation, to whom their pastor spoke for over an hour in support of his views. His decision was: "To remain in the Presbyterian Church in Canada, and go with her into the United Church of Canada."

Mr. Cranston stated that his announcement had been delayed because he hated contention. He had realized, however, that it was necessary to face it and when he did so, weighing all points as carefully as possible, he saw no other course open to him than to remain in his own church and move with it into the Union. He was very emphatic that the Presbyterian Church had constitutionally made, and several times confirmed its decision. After carefully studying the basis of Union, he was able to say that neither in its polity nor its theology could he find any insurmountable obstacle to justify him in remaining out of the United Church.

Rev. Mr. Cranston is a brother-in-law of Rev. Mr. Glassford, who recently spoke against Union in St. Andrew's Church, Peterboro. He has opposed Union until recently, and his decision now to enter the United Church will undoubtedly weaken the anti-union cause.

BANK DIRECTORS MAKE AN APPEAL

Barnard and Smith Are Today Out on Bail Pending Hearing on Their Application.

TORONTO, Dec. 2.—(Canadian Press).—Discussion here of the exact significance of the sentences imposed yesterday by Judge Coatsworth on C. A. Barnard and C. F. Smith, of Montreal, directors of the defunct Home Bank and on Sidney Jones, its chief accountant, has evolved a consensus of opinion that the fixed sentences of eighteen, six and four months respectively cannot be shortened except by the clemency department of the Ministry of Justice. Additional indeterminate sentences of six, six and four months, respectively, however, can be shortened, legal men believe, by the parole board on its own authority. Barnard and Smith are at liberty today on temporary bail, pending the hearing of their application for permanent bail to-morrow morning, an appeal against their sentences is being entered at the higher Provincial courts. Sidney Jones, bank auditor, is in the city jail here. It is expected that he will be sent to Guelph Reformatory to serve out his sentence, and that the other two, if their appeal fails, will also go to that institution.

STOLEN EXAMINATION PAPERS WILL BE SUBJECT OF INQUIRY BY CITY BOARD OF EDUCATION

Members Resent Hushing Up of Department's Investigations and Unfair Suspicions.

ASK FOR REPORT.

If Information Not Given One Member Suggests Independent Inquiry.

Peterborough Board of Education last night took a definite stand on the question of the theft of school examination papers when it decided to demand a report from the investigating authorities. While some members opposed the move as tending to resurrect a painful subject that had been allowed to die a natural death, the majority of the Board favored an open policy and supported a resolution asking for the information.

The papers were stolen from the Collegiate Institute on the eve of the departmental examinations in June, when some one entered the school during the night and abstracted the paners from their envelopes. Detective Hammond of the Criminal Investigation Department was sent to the city by the Department of Justice acting on information supplied by the Department of Education, and made an investigation extending over some weeks. In the course of his inquiry he interviewed many of the pupils and parents, and on his return to Toronto made a full report to his superiors.

Premier G. H. Ferguson, who also holds the portfolio of Minister of Education, refused to divulge any information regarding the occurrence, and requested the press to with-hold the information it had, with a promise that a full account would be given on completion of the investigation.

It is this report that the Board of Education will now ask, through its solicitor, E. A. Peck.

Reply Inadequate

The discussion of the subject, which occupied first place in the deliberations of the Board last night was precipitated by a letter received from the Department of Education in which it was merely stated that no information was available. E. B. Fowler remarked that the letter was very nice, if written to a child of ten years, but as a reply to a query from a responsible body it was inadequate.

The Chairman, J. M. Greene, said that when the Board is placed in its position by the ratepayers and citizens of the city and made responsible to them, and its house is broken into, it is incumbent upon it to find out why and by whom it was broken into. "It is strange," he remarked, "if this information is in the hands of the Deptartment why we, as trustees for the people, are not made aware of the facts."

Dr. John J. Craig asked why the subject should be brought up at this time.

E. B. Fowler said the position is serious. Some boys have gone to University after passing these examinations, and through suppression of the facts suspicion may be cast upon them.

Mr. Greene: It has not been made clear to the pupils and to the citizens who the guilty parties are, and that is not fair to the pupils or to the citizens. If the Department knows who is guilty, we should be informed.

Board Should Act

Dr. F. C. Neal said if the Department is not going to act the Board has the right to try to find out what it can of the affair. "Are we to allow our school to be broken into without finding out who does it? It's easy to say 'let it drop'; but these things very often come back, sometimes after many years when the opportunity to clear them up is gone. We know the rumours that are prevalent in the city, and certainly some steps should be taken.

Roland Denne asked whether the object is to ask the Department to force the issue and if they haven't the right party to keep detectives on the job until they get him

Dr. Craig asked why the matter was not broached before this time, and E. B. Fowler said the Board relied upon the Department, with the understanding that it would be informed of the finding.

Dr. Neal said there are two distinct questions involved; the stealing of the papers and the breaking into of the school. One is a departmental affair and the other is the Board's.

E. B. Fowler reminded the members that one boy especially is named in gossip connected with the affair, which has been talked of all over the province, and if he is not guilty the injustice should be cleared up.

It was moved by E. B Fowler, seconded by Dr. Neal, and resolved, that the solicitor of the Board, E. A. Peck, be instructed to take up the matter with the Department of Education and the Department of Justice and report to the Board, and that the matter be also taken up through W. H. Bradburn, M.P.P.

Inspector A. H. Leake reported very favorably on the household science and manual training departments of Prince of Wales School and on the household science department in Central School. Of the household science department in Prince of Wales school he said the rooms are well kept and attractive and the equipment is remarkably well arranged. Sewing is well organized and taught under efficient teachers; good work is being done in sewing and cooking and the classes are progressing most satisfactorily.

At Central School the kitchen is commended as being tidy and well kept, with equipment in good condition. Good practical work is being done by the girls, who are develop-

STRIKE UNSETTLED.

Seamen in Australia Shut Out Commonwealth Liners From Port.

LONDON, Dec. 3. — (Canadian Press).—Though active negotiations are proceeding for a settlement of the strike of waterside workers in Australia, a special press despatch from Freemantle states that the situation is serious. The striking seamen refuse to permit chartered vessels of the Commonwealth line to use the ports.

Labor Ministers condemn the methods of President Walsh of the Seamen's Union who has gone to Perth in response to a summons from the government of West Australia.

The latest strike of the waterside workers in Australia was called to force the closing of the Sydney maritime bureau through which agency most of the overseas vessels at Australian ports secure their labor supply.

Inspector Said He Never Heard of Illegal Operations In Certain District.

MONTREAL, Dec. 3.—Recalled as a witness at the police inquiry yesterday and examined by Dalluste Lavery, representing a group of petitioners, Inspector Robert was questioned closely concerning his activities during elections and also as to his knowledge of persons engaged in illegal medical practices.

Before the inspector was called, Constable Euzere Pilon was instructed to bring before the commission, his bank books and a statement of his revenues. During his examination it was revealed that the constable, who has been on the force seven years and is in charge of theatres and movies under Inspector Robert owned seventeen police dogs and that he had refused $1,700 for board in various parts of the city, but denied that any of them were at Rose Davids'.

Witness declared he had never met Inspector Robert at the David place, nor could he remember having anything to do with a man named Choquett. He swore positively that he had never asked Choquett for $50.

DEATH OF WIFE SCHOOL LESSON FOR SHEATSLEY

Professor of Religion Tells Students It Shows All Must Have Respect For Law.

ATTORNEY PRAISED.

Clergyman's Mother Now Head of House and Family Resumes Routine.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Dec. 3.—Two weeks ago the calcined bones of Addie Sheatsley were shaken down from the furnace in the cellar of the parsonage of her husband, the Rev. C. V. Sheatsley, in the college suburb of Bexley.

Monday the husband addressed the students of Capital University, where he is professor of religion, and drew a lesson from the ghastly happening in his family, the lesson being that the students should have a proper respect for the powers that be, the law.

Mystery Unsolved.

He praised the prosecuting attorney and his aides for their work in endeavoring to solve the mystery.

Mr. Sheatsley's calm voice, full of quiet color, showed no hint of emotion. He might have been talking of a tragedy in a distant city and not the one that was enacted in the cellar beneath his study in Bexley.

As far as he is concerned, the mystery of death of the patient little woman who gave twenty-four years of her life to helping him advance and to raising four of his children, keeping the house clean, feeding everyone, wearing herself out in drudgery, goes into the past as a crime unsolved.

Yesterday he resumed his classes. His boys, Milton, twenty, and Clarence, sixteen, resumed their studies in the University on Monday and the girls, Elizabeth, fourteen, and Alice, eleven, started out for school on time, books under their arms.

The Sheatsley family has resumed the even tenor of its way. The clergyman's mother is now the head of the house.

"Normal and Unselfish."

Further to mark the tragedy's close, Otto Mees, president of the University, issued a signed statement praising the character of Clarence Sheatsley, the boy who said that he saw his mother in the furnace, that he closed the furnace door on her, that he went to his room and lay down for a while, and then went to the college campus to pass the football with boy friends, never telling of the horrible thing his eyes had beheld.

Mees said that Clarence had been a pal of his son and that he had ample opportunity to study him, finding him normal, cheerful, bright, modest and unselfish.

In the eyes of the Bexley people the story told by Clarence, the failure of the father to put out the fire when he saw what was left of his wife going to ashes, the failure of any one to bring a single reason for an outside murder or suicide, mean nothing.

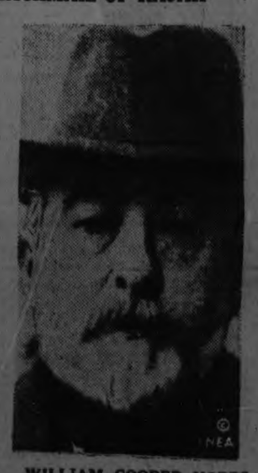
CONSPIRATORS IN BLACKMAIL OF RAJAH

MONTAGUE NOEL NEWTON.



WILLIAM COOPER HOBBS.

"The Greatest Scoundrel Unhung," Sir John Simon said of Newton, who it was stated in evidence, posed as Mr. Robinson when he burst into the Rajah's room in a Paris hotel, and discovered Mrs. Robinson there.

Another of the "villains" in the cast of blackmail plotters, deseribed as "that slimy creature of the legal demi-monde." It was Hobbs who handled the cheque for £150,000, and withdrew the money.

WAITED ALL NIGHT TO HEAR "RAJAH" CASE

The crowd that tried to get into Lord Darling's Court to hear th e sensational Robinson blackmail trial reached mob proportions. Men and women stood in line all night to be among the first admitted to the limited gallery accommodation.

ZAGLOUL SENDS HIS OPINIONS

Old Policy of Persecution Now Reigns in Egypt Writes Former Premier.

BITTER FEELING.

LONDON, Dec. 3. — (Canadian Press).—Zagloul Pasha, former Premier of Egypt, has sent a message dated Nov. 29 to Benjamin C. Spoor, former Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury and chief whip of the Labor party, setting forth his views on the Egyptian situation.

This message was read at a meeting of the National Council for the Prevention of War last night, held for the purpose of urging that Anglo-Egyptian differences be submitted to the League of Nations or the International Court of Justice. In it Zagloul says: "It seems that tre British Government was determined, even before the murder of Sir Lee Stack, to get rid of my government which had been constitutional in every sense of the word. The first results of the newly adopted policy are the adjournment of Parliament for one month, pending its probable dissolution, and the arrest of several members of parliament and others without any definite charge.

"The arrests were first conducted by armed British troops violating the sanctity of the victims' home and trampling underfoot the constitution which provided immunity against arrest for members of parliament.

"I am happy to say that the country is exceedingly quiet after my repeated appeals that it remain so and despite military and police provocations. Egypt now is virtually governed by martial law, lacking only the name. The old policy of persecution now reigns. Feelings of bitterness and suppressed indignation are general. The news from England indicating the Imperialists' dread of arbitration is significant and increases that feeling. The people are in no wise dismayed, all believing in eternal justice."

BABY STRANGLED.

HULL, Que., Dec. 3.—(Canadian Press).—Sarah McCastlin, of Low, Que., charged with infanticide in the death of her new born babe on November 15 last, was given a preliminary trial in Police Court here yesterday afternoon before Judge Roland Millar, and was remanded until Friday for a voluntary statement.

Dr. Wilfred Derome, Quebec Provincial criminal analyst, testified that he found, on examining the body of the child, that it had died from strangulation.

CHAS. E. ROBINSON.

The plaintiff in the action against the Midland Bank of London, for $625,000, part of the $750,000 obtained from an Indian potentate by blackmail. The bank contended that the money, which was deposited by Hobbs was not received for Robinson, who was castigated for suing for money which he knew to have been ill-gotten. Robinson and his wife were acquitted of conspiracy in the plot to mulct the Rajah.

Mr. Justice Darling yesterday gave judgment in favor of the bank, dismissing the Robinson claim. In the trial it was said Robinson did not look the part of the husband of a society woman, and for that reason Newton was substituted in the discovery scene, the greater to imprtss the Indian Prince.

PARIS BOASTS BUT ONE LARGE FAMILY

Alsatians Appeal For Bilingual Training—Language Derived from the German.

PARIS, Dec. 3. — (Canadian Press).—Paris can boast of only one family out of the seventy families in France having ten or more children whose names were published by the French Academy yesterday as winners of prizes of 25,000 francs each. The prizes were given by the Cognacq Foundation as a reward to deserving French families. The other prize-winning families with ten or more children dwell in the provinces, in villages and hamlets. Eighty families, which have from six to ten children and which were awarded prizes of 10,000 francs each, also all reside in the provinces.

The heads of nine-tenths of France's large families as enumerated in the list are farmers, farm laborers and small tradesmen.

More than 2,500,000 francs will be distributed by the French Academy this year on behalf of M. Cognacq, who is the owner of one of the largest department stores in Paris. M. Cognacq some years ago put aside some 40,000,000 francs, the interest from which is awarded annually "to encourage the birth-rate in France."

20 REVAL "REDS" SHOT FOR PART IN REVOLUTION

Leaders Tried By Court Martial and Pay Swift Penalty For Bloody Coup.

WAS WELL PLANNED.

Killed Three Army Officers in Their Beds—Revolt Blamed on International Communists.

RIGA, Latvia, Dec. 3.—(Canadian Press).—Twenty Communist leaders in the Reval revolt were shot on Tuesday after a court martial, according to a special despatch from that city. The Communists are reported to have killed three army officers in their beds in addition to murdering five others they had seized. One Communist band bombed the home of Karl Einbund, former Minister of Home Affairs, who had a narrow escape from death.

SQUADRON OFF COAST.

LONDON, Dec. 3. — (Canadian Press).—A Reuter's despatch from Helsingfors, referring to the Reval Communist revolt, states that a Red squadron has been reported as cruising off the Esthonian coast. This squadron, it was added, withdrew as soon as it became clear that the Communists at Reval had been defeated.

There were no other disturbances in the provinces except that two railway bridges on the Reval-Dorpat line were destroyed. It was said there are reasons to believe that the Communists intended to increase their forces from the provinces as soon as they had gained control of all the important points in Reval.

Premier Akel in the Esthonian Chamber Monday is declared to have said that the Reval rising was stirred up by the Third Internationale.

CAREFULLY PLANNED.

BERLIN, Dec. 3. — (Canadian Press). — Advices received by the Esthonian Legation here yesterday report that the Esthonian uprising in Reval on Monday falled within two hours after it started. The Government claims that the situation is now well in hand. It was said the rebellion evidently was well planned and organized, as the Communists simultaneously seized the Government administrative buildings, station, parliament, post office and telephone exchange. Nineteen persons on the Government side were killed in the street fighting, it was stated, including Minister of Communications Korn, while probably 50 of the Communists lost their lives.

The Legation predicts that the Government will deal severely with the six Communist leaders arrested and the others now being sought. Martial law has been proclaimed, and General Lainener given plenary powers.

The Communist plans, the Legation reports, were to surprise and kill the guards and throw hand

AIDE TO RAJAH BEFORE COURT

HELD IN PARIS.

PARIS, Dec. 3. — (Canadian Press).—James Charles Arthur, former British army officer, who was arrested Monday as the mysterious aide-de-camp of the unnamed Indian Prince in the sensational Robinson blackmail suit in London, underwent a lengthy examination yesterday afternoon, which was attended by his attorney, M. Gide, and an assistant. The attorney asked for more precise information regarding the extradition warrant on which Arthur was arrested here.

M. Gide at first stated that Arthur might decide to fight extradition on the ground that he was a citizen of the Irish Free State, and that France had no extradition treaty with that State and Great Britain could not extradite under the circumstances. During the examination, however, M. Gide said that his client probably would fight extradition but in other grounds than that of Irish nationality.

Arthur will undergo formal interrogation before the French judicial authorities on Thursday, at which it is expected he will shed new light on the events leading up to the famous London trial. At this trial it was testified that he was one of the ringleaders in the plot to mulct the unnamed eastern potentate out of a huge fortune.

The prisoner's attitude is said to be that certain facts at the London hearing were glossed over or passed in silence, which, if they had been revealed, would completely have changed the nature of the verdict in the case. It is stated that Arthur claimed he, as well as the Indian prince, was a victim of the blackmailing plot, and that he lost 500,000 francs of his own funds.

KINGSTON, December 3. — To save the life of a little orphan, Geo. Wood, of Kingston, gave two transfusions of blood at the General Hospital.

Mr. Wood has been in the hospital for the past month and a half suffering from a foot trouble. During the past week it was found that one of the orphan children was failing and in order that the child's strength might be regained it was found necessary to have a blood transfusion.

Mr. Wood readily offered whatever blood might be required and the transfusion of 200 c.c was made.

Seymour Circuit Churches Observe Anniversary—Personal Mention.

CAMPBELLFORD, December 3.—Three of the churches of Seymour Circuit, Stanwood, Zion and Hoard's, held their missionary anniversary services on Sunday. These were well attended. Rev. C. H. Daniel, pastor, preached, and a missionary offering was taken. They expect to reach the sum of six hundred dollars and by the way the money came in on Sunday the circuit expects to attain the objective. The services at the English line church will be held later.

At the Young Peoples' League in the Methodist church there were some special features: Reading a hymn in unison; heart searching verses on love and service by 18 boys and girls. Miss Verna Saunders had charge of the programme; Miss Nelly M. Hoover sang a solo, and Mr. S. J. Abernethy gave a splendid topic on the verse, "And I will go before thee and make the crooked paths straight"

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist church met at the home of Mrs. Charles Davidson for its December (Christmas) meeting on Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. Oliver, the president, presided. There were 27 ladies present. There was a special printed Christmas programme of Scripture readings and hymns. Mrs. Ashton and Mrs. E. J. Sonney each gave a Christmas reading. The devotional topic, "God's desire for our prayers" was given by Mrs. Small. Miss Nelly Hoover sang a solo "No Room in the Inn." Mrs. G. W. Hammond gave some gleanings from the Study Book for this year. This was very interesting and instructive. The topic was the student movement in China showing what a difference education makes. It meant a new era for China when she became a Republic. Those who were able to read has been more than doubled since a new language more simple, like the spoken language, was introduced in 1918. It meant a new tide of thought for the people of China.

The next meeting in January will be held in the Sunday school room and will be a specila hour of prayer.

The services on Sunday in St. Andrew's Church were well attended and all were glad to hear Dr. Laird preach. As Dr. Laird was an old pastor of the church, many availed themselves of the opportunity to hear him.

The fowl supper at St. Andrew's, held in the Sunday School-room on Tuesday night, was a great success. Over eight hundred people were present to enjoy the splendid supper, and the proceeds amounted to over four hundred dollars. About half-past eight, after all had had their supper, the programme, which was given in the auditorium, began. Rev. C. F. McIntosh, the pastor, was the chairman. He spoke a few words of congratulation and welcome, after which he announced the programme: An opening anthem by the choir, the solo being taken by Mrs. De Carroll; a reading, Miss Lillian Hay; solo, Mrs. De Carroll; an address by Rev. Mr. McKenzie, pastor of Burnbrae Church; his subject was, "Conditions a century ago compared to conditions now." A century ago there were nothing but log houses, with only fireplaces, no matches, no lamps. Farmers had nothing but oxen and scythes, etc., to use. The woman of the house spun the yarn and wove it into cloth. There were no ships, no street cars, no autos.

These were days of simplicity, loneliness and hardship. He also spoke of difference in social life. In those days men were hanged for the most trivial things. He gave an illustration that happened years ago in England. A little girl of eight, who broke a window and stole some candies, was sentenced to be hanged. The women were oppressed and had to work in coal mines. Children from five to ten were taken out from London to work in the mills in Lancashire. One hundred years ago there were just seventeen protestant ministers in Upper Canada, (Ontario): six Methodist, three Anglican, four Presbyterian and four Baptists. Now there are hundreds of churches schools and colleges and ministers. What has been the cause of all this change? It is due to the spirit of the Master. His teaching laid the foundations for the Deaf, Dumb, and blind. The Social and moral progress is due to the Christian Church.

We have great opportunities because of our educational system. Our aim should be to produce the highest type of manhood, the world has ever seen, deep true and strong. This is our privilege and duty to stand for righteousness, justice and freedom. Let us do our best for God, the Church and Canada.

This splendid address was followed by a solos by Mrs. F. De F. Free, reading, Miss L. Hay, solo, Rev. G. C. Clarke, rector of Christ church.

The congregation then enjoyed hearing Rev. W. Elliott, pastor of the Methodist Church, give an address. He congratulated the pastor and congregation of St. Andrews on the great success of their undertaking. His theme was: "Things worth while." We have to-day special things that come to us out of the years of the past. Much to use and to enjoy. How little we have, that somebody else did not have a hand in what are some of the things we're glad to have and what do we do with them:

1st Good Books— As we read them, they bring us into contact with great lessons, splendid type of manhood. The greatest book of all, the Bible, in which God walks.

2nd. Our splendid homes and home life. Not a house only, but a home. We must not let our homes degenerate itno mere houses. It must be a heart life. Everybody in the home can contribute some portion to make that home life.

Third—The church is worth while, the best organization in the world to-day. What would our cities, towns and villages be without a church. Let us keep our churches.

Rev. C. F. McIntosh expressed gratitude to those who helped in the programme and also to the ladies for the splendid supper. The choir sang a closing anthem, the solo parts being taken by Mrs. Free, Miss H. Atkinson and Mr. W. Henson. The programme throughout was good and enjoyed by all present. Mr. Pearson, the organist and choir leader, played some selections on the organ during the wait upstairs which added to the enjoyment of those gathered there. Mr. Jack Haig played some instrumental solos on the piano downstairs during supper.

TELLER SENTENCED.

Five Years In Prison For Part In Bank Hold-up.

MONTREAL, Dec. 3.—(Canadian Press). — Joseph Raymond, former teller of the Cote des Neiges branch of the Molsons Bank, was yesterday sentenced to five years in the penitentiary by Mr. Justice Wilson.

The court declared that it was on account of his youth that he did not receive a much longer term, like Raoul Beauchamp, who was given twenty-five years and twenty lashes, the latter part of the sentence being remitted, however, by the Solicitor-General.

Raymond was convicted of having participated in the hold-up of the bank last February. The main evidence against him was that his own card was found in one of the pockets of Beauchamp when the latter was arrested in a lumber camp. The evidence of Chiarli, the Crown witness, included Raymond as one of the "brains" of the hold-up ga...

THE ALLEY OF LONG AGO.

Tragedy: A spark from the chimney of a Boston tenement destroys an enormous pile of kindling wood on the roof. This wood had been brought from miles away by small boys of the families that live below.

Throughout the hot summer they had toiled, hauling the kindling in toy wagons or breathing heavily as they trudged along with their precious cargo in their arms.

"About $100 damages," reported the prosaic firemen. But the official record does not cover the disappointment and heartache of the small lads whose toil has vanished in smoke. To them it is a tragedy.

Grown-up men will sympathize with these poor Boston boys, as memory takes them back to alley-prowling of years gone by. The alley had not been virtually eliminated then by city congestion and high land values.

It was the choice playground of all red-blooded lads. There we gathered kindling, collected old iron and bones for the junkman, or searched near the liverystable for the symbol of good luck—the horseshoe.

Comes, too, in memory, the alley fences from whose tops we raided fruit trees, and no fruit ever tasted sweeter.

The alley, as a boyhood institution, is just about gone except in smaller towns or villages. City youth, never having tasted this sweet, doesn't know what it is missing. But a considerable army of us, if boys again, wouldn't trade, for modern youth's radios and movies and other marvels, the old-time alley and its fences disfigured with initials carved by the proud owners of Christmas jackknives.

Progress is fine, clutering life with fancy manufactured articles. But we lose a lot of the great thrills and pleasures when we forfeit simplicity.

Tom Sawyer's natural habitat is an alley.

PARALYZED BY FRIGHT.

A woman in Garfield, N. Y., is unable to talk or move hand or foot, as a result of seeing her husband in their blazing garage. The fear that his death was certain actually parlyzed her.

No doubt, it is temporary and she will recover from the shock, possibly already has.

The case is an exceptionally powerful illustration of the power of mind over body.

Can disease be cured by the power of mind, by will-power and faith? Many think so. Many others do not. But it is an accepted scientific fact that many diseases can be CAUSED by the mind.

The most extreme instance is hypochondria. This is a mental disorder, in which the patient has a morbid anxiety about his health. In turn, he imagines he has about everything under the sun—and actually develops, by the influence of mind, symptoms that are apt to baffle all except the most expert diagnostician.

It is believed that his mental condition upsets the normal functioning of adrenals and other endocrine glands, thereby causing what, to the victim, is very real and agonizing illness.

Power of mind over matter? Let 10 people in a day tell you that you look ill, and it's 50-50 that by night you will be in bed or think you should be. To aid recovery, never tell a patient he looks badly. Instead, impress on him that he looks better.

Look at the thing backwards—the power of matter over the mind. Some years ago (1891) Prentice Mulford wrote a series of books, "Your Forces and How to Use Them." Mulford and others of his school of thought advanced the theory that people rise or fall to their surroundings. In proof of this: so-called "culture" is about 90 per cent. environment, 10 per cent. heredity.

David Gibson has pointed out that a pig isn't naturally a dirty animal. He merely descends to the level of his surroundings. Raise a pig in a clean pen and he'll spurn filth. This has been demonstrated on experimental farms.

Most important in our environment is the matter of personal associates, in business or private life. When inferior and superior come in contact, superior descends partway to the other's level and the inferior correspondingly rises.

You can "get a man's number" by his choice of friends, the same as a business is reflected by its customers, or the customers by the firm they deal with. as the average American of 30.

OLDEST MAN IS 163.

Oldest living man in the world is the Manchurian giant, Yuan Kwo-Chang. He claims he's 163. Orientals accept him as authentic. The Chinese, in particular, believe he doesn't exaggerate his age. Marshal Chang pensions him, 200 yen a year.

And yet Yuan, living his life in a half-barbaric Mongolian district, hasn't actually "lived" as much as the average Canadian of 30.

What counts isn't the number of birthdays, but how much happens between birthdays.

Our generation, amid scientific marvels and with the whole world literally at our door as a result of transportation magic, crams into one year as much experience, learning, sensations and impressions as our great-grandfathers got in a dozen.

In the one-minute march from death cell to electric chair, the condemned murderer lives through an eternity. In a second of sleep, you can "go through" years of life as vivid as the real thing, though it's all a dream.

Time is relative.

Save $1,000. With it, you can travel more than Marco Polo in his whole lifetime. Or Columbus or any of the early explorers. The main difference is that you will not have their hardships. And you will be exploring the known instead of the uncharted.

Men now in the prime of life will have a chance to live 1,000 years, by approaching medical discoveries. So claimed the eminent German scientist, Professor Fritz Haber, recently. He expects the elimination of causes of natural death.

After enduring a few centuries, people would begin to curse the scientists who condemned them to the 1,000 years. Life begins to get dull after the eightieth birthday or before. The average old person is quite calm as he contemplates the approaching end—more than resigned, he is willing. He has tasted life to its full extent and is ready for another world.

This earth is not interesting enough to be a permanent home, nor even for 1,000 years. Life is a journey. And a gradual sameness makes any long trip tiresome toward its close. The ocean may be at its best, delightful. But passengers still thrill when they sight land—destination—nearly as much so as early explorers.

THE SMOKING HABIT.

A medical specialist, who serves a lot of mental science along with his pills, tells us that it isn't a tenth as hard to desert Lady Nicotine as the average smoker believes.

He cites this case: One of his patients was informed that he was in the early stages of tuberculosis of the lungs. The bad news came unexpectedly, like a bolt out of the blue. The doctor told him that he hadn't a Chinaman's chance unless he quit his cigarettes.

This man was a regular fiend for fags—smoked two and three packages a day. And yet he stopped instantly and without difficulty. It was simply a case that he desired to live more than to smoke. Chronic alcoholism usually is much the same. It's relatively easy to quit if the drinker really wants to. He usually doesn't want to.

The average smoker periodically gets the notion that he is smoking too much. He begins to "taper down." Presently his body responds and his indigestion or insomnia or whatever his trouble happened to be, responds. He feels so fine that he unconsciously smokes more, and soon is hitting it up as hard as ever.

The only way to quit any habit is to quit it entirely.

In trying to break off the tobacco habit a man rarely has a sufficiently strong motive to make him win the fight. If he has the motive—as in the case of the tuberculosis victim fighting for his life—he wins against nicotine with ease.

Fear helps him. Given enough fear, man recognizes no obstacles.

No drunkard, for instance, can quit liquor until he develops a genuine fear of its power over him.

Nearly every one believes that to quit smoking means certain agony. That's the popular notion. It is inherited. Jokes help keep it alive. So do the boasts of self-imagined martyrs relating their agonies when they abandoned cigar, pipe or cigarette, always with exaggeration.

Admittedly, to quit tobacco is no easy job in the case of a confirmed smoker, particularly an old-timer whose system has become acustomed to it. For a man of 65 to quit is apt, in some cases, to be fatal. But the point is that it's not as hard to quit as most men believe.

As to whether there's any use of quitting at all, that's another matter. Doctors disagree.

Obstacles are about three-fourths a matter of our attitude toward them. You recall the famous prize-fighter, knocked out by a loafer who didn't know whom he was hitting.

SOVIET RUSSIA'S EXILE SYSTEM.

When the Czar's Government was overthrown there was a joyous yet pathetic return of political exiles from remote Siberian settlements whither they had been banished by a tyrannical bureaucracy. The world was quick to express the hope that the old cruelties of the exile system were gone forever. Yet yesterday's uncensored cable dispatch from Mr. Mackenzie, long the correspondent of the Daily News in Moscow, told in detail how thousands have been exiled to prison camps by the Soviet authorities.

Long investigation leads the correspondent to affirm that "Soviet Russia has adopted the worst features of the Czarist exile system and has added some special hardships of its own." Men and women, even young girls, are sent to dreary isolated camps in the far north, just outside the Arctic Circle, while many others go to fever-infested swamps to perform heavy tasks under almost insufferable surroundings. Banished Georgians have been driven into the frozen north in light clothing quite unfitted to the climate. No real provision is made for large number of persons who in isolated villages on the remotest edge of civilization cannot possibly support themselves.

This torture of helpless human beings has been going on for two years. Mr. Mackenzie says: "Many of the exiles seek to end their misery by suicide. Some, as in a recent noted case in Leningrad, kill themselves in despair after sentence is passed. The defendants, as M. Kursky, the People's Commissar of Justice, told me in an interview, are not permitted to examine witnesses or refute the evidence against them, are not allowed legal assistance and are not given opportunity to call rebutting witnesses. Many of the exiles assured me that they had only the vaguest idea of what were the charges against them."

What, then, are the terrible crimes with which these unfortunates are charged? Many of the charges are wholly frivolous. Members of the old nobility, persons belonging to non-Bolshevist political organizations, college professors and students, churchmen who have offended because of their piety—any one, in short, whose presence is distasteful to the Government for any cause—may be condemned in secret, denied the privilege of making a defense and driven away to suffer and very likely to die of exposure.

Here is a manifestation of brutal tyranny that should deliver the world from any last vestige of the belief, still held by some, that there is a benevolent purpose at the bottom of Bolshevism as it is operated in Russia.—Chicago News.

NEWS CAMPBELLFOFRD

Toronto Pastor Addressed Two Large Congregations.

CAMPBELLFORD, Dec. 3.—The last of the Sunday Special Services for the anniversary month of November at Christ church was held on Sunday. Dr. Kingston of Trinity College, Toronto, preached both morning and evening to large congregations especially at night. The subject for the morning was taken from Daniel, chapter 3, verse 18.

The three words "But, if not". He spoke of the chances people have in these days of worshipping false gods just as in olden times. The gods of to-day: might, riches, and pleasure.

Sometimes one has to go through the fiery furnace to avoid worshipping these false gods. There has to be a lot of sacrifice.

The founders of this parish in Campbellford had to stay by the Truth and not turn aside where others worshipped. They were willing to stay by the truth or the church would not have reached what it is to-day.

We can worship false gods to-day if we make a lot of the things that pull us down. We worship riches if we get our money in any improper way.

His evening themes was: Are there not twelve hours in the day? Doing ones duty. Even if you do your duty in the first hour this is no excuse for not doing it in the third or fourth hour. There was special music also. The officials of the church are quite sure that they will be near the objective in connection with the clearing off the mortgage. The people have responded generously and several hundred dollars were sent by former members of the church who are away from Campbellford.

A few friends went with Dr. Kingston to the rectory after church Sunday night to enjoy a few hours with him.

Dr. Kingston was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Kingston, Frank street during his stay in town.

TORONTO LIVESTOCK.

TORONTO, Dec 2.—Monday's business at the Union Stock Yards witnessed the first indication of an upward trend in cattle prices for six months. The improvement was not more than 25 cents a cwt in general, although in a few instances the prices were higher by 50 cents a cwt. The exporters only secured about 250 head on Monday, 150 steers and the balance cows were figured to be at an advance of 25 cents a cwt.

There was a strong trade for stockers and feeders on Monday and belated buyers paid 10 to 25 cents a cwt. higher than last week. One good load of feeders averaging 1070 lbs. each was bought by Eddie Parsons this morning at $5.25 a cwt. Those were westerners which had been fed here for a year.

The demand for butchers' cattle was good again today and $6.50 to $6.65 was paid for choice butchers, while good ones brought $6 to $6.25. Medium quality butchers sold from $4.75 to $5.50 a cwt. Butchers' cows were also firm. Export cows sold as high as $5.50 and good cows were $4 to $4.50 a cwt. Canners cows were hard to get and most of these sold 25 cents a cwt. higher at $2 a cwt.

Calves are running light supplies, and prices are firmed, with tops good for 11 cents, and good calves 10 cents. The best of the mediums are selling up to 9, and the heavy calf over 250 lbs is being bought around 6 cents a pound.

This is no oversupply of light lambs, and these are having a good market. A few extra choice lambs sold at 13½ cents, and large bunches of good lambs at 13 cents. Heavy lambs and bucks are 10 to 11½ cents. Good handyweight sheep are 7 to 7½ cents a pound.

Hog prices are decidedly unsettled, and buyers are sitting back and waiting for a further drop to $8.50 a cwt. f.o.b. With the Buffalo and Chicago markets stronger, sellers are hopeful of holding the price at $7.75.

Current Quotations.

Choice export steers $7.25 $7.75

Canadian Pacific
Canada's Heaviest Taxpayer

IN the five years, 1919-1923, inclusive, the Canadian Pacific paid into the revenues of the country in taxes of all kinds the huge total of $31,666,830.08.

The Canadian Pacific has returned in taxes to Canada a large part of all the cash subsidies that have been granted to it.

The original subsidy was $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres of land, and some of the land was returned to the government on the basis of $1.50 per acre in liquidation of a loan for $10,000,000, which had the effect of increasing the cash subsidy to $35,000,000 and reducing the land subsidy to 18,300,000 acres. To this must be added the value of 700 miles of road built by the government before the project was turned over to the Canadian Pacific, and various subsidies earned by lines before having been taken over by the Canadian Pacific.

But to the cash in taxes returned to the country, must be added the incalculable benefits the Canadian Pacific has brought to Canada by the expenditure of $68,000,000 for colonization and irrigation, the construction of 8,000 miles of branch lines in the west, the settlement and development of 17,000,000 acres of its lands, the development of mines and lumber industries, the benefits conferred upon the country by the greatest system of transportation in the world, extending over two oceans and the continent, and the world-wide advertisement of Canada as the possessor of such a system.

Canada has received back in taxes from the Canadian Pacific much of its own capital investment and, in addition, dividends in benefits which, if they could be calculated in dollars, would amount to hundreds of times the original cost of the Canadian Pacific to the country.

Today the Canadian Pacific is in better position than ever to serve the country. Its world-encircling organization, its steamship lines and its 15,000 miles of railroad in Canada, enable it to continue, with greater efficiency, the work of building up the country which it has helped to make.

GOOD MUSIC CHEERS DRESDEN

DRESDEN, Dec. 3.—(Associated Press).—To cheer the downtrodden, a series of free symphony concerts has been given to the unemployed of this city by the League for Musical Culture. The attendance was overwhelming, and the interest of the audience keen, especially when the management provided musical experts as speakers who, previous to each performance, sketched the life of the composer and explained in simple language the underlying musical ideas of the opus.

HORSE-TAIL HAIR SHORTAGE.

Violin Bowmakers Are Anxious Because White Variety is Dwindling.

LONDON, Dec. 3.—Makers of violin bows are becoming anxious over the growing scarcity of white horses, from the tails of which are taken hairs for the manufacture of bowstrings. According to an expert there is a decided shortage of white horse-tail hair from Siberia and East Russia, whence the best supplies come, and thus far no suitable substitute has been found.

When the supply of gut used for instrument strings began to dwindle, silk and metal were successfully introduced as substitutes.

IN MILLBROOK AND DISTRICT

Ministerial Association Held a Meeting—Interesting Debate.

MILLBROOK, Dec. 3.—The ministerial association held its December meeting of Monday at 9.30 a.m., the president, Rev. R. M. Paterson of Frazerville, being in the chair.

Rev. M. G. B. Williams was the speaker for the day, his paper dealing with the place of music, particularly the hymns with their encouragement of congregational singing, in the church service. The history of several well-known hymns was given before the address was concluded. "Unfortunately the history of thousands of hymns, which have been sung and loved, has died with the authors, and no one knows the circumstances under which they came to be written. But, on the other hand, many of these stories have been treasured through the years, and knowing them adds interest and sentiment to the singing of the hymn itself."

"Sacred music should not only be connected with words, but adapted to their sense rather than to their sound, and then it not only pleases the ear but affects the heart. Neither can congregational singing of the hymns used in public worship produce its best effect unless it is performed with true sincerity. There ought to be perfect concord between the music, the words, and the heart, for those who sing praises to God from the heart know the true meaning of "music in the soul," and cannot help realizing a feeling of solemnity when contemplating and worshipping the Supreme Majesty of Heaven."

Mr. Williams was warmly congratulated on the excellent subject matter of his paper, and the wish was generally expressed that another of similar character might be given in the near future.

The annual election of officers will take place at the January meeting. Those present on Monday were: Rev. G. I. Craw, Springville; Rev. R .T .Richards, Cavanville; Rev. Canon Allen, Rev. G. S. Gervan, Rev. F. W. Howard.

Interesting Debate.

An interesting debate was held, under the auspices of the literary society at the Continuation School, on Friday afternoon, the subject being: 'Resolved that the barbarian was happier than the civilized man." The contests between Forms II and III, Margaret Howard and Keith Barnard upholding the negative, (Form II) and Jean Burnham and Arnold Armstrong (Form III) advancing arguments for the affirmative. Judges were: Mabel McCarthy for Form II, George Elson for Form III, H. Jordan, one of the teachers, being neutral.

The negative won by a small margin. Case was well presented from both sides, some kindly criticism giving the speakers an idea of necessary improvement in clearness of delivery, consiceness of argument, etc. that will be of value an another occasion.

H. James of Bowmanville, was elected on Saturday to represent the County of Durham at the Older Boys' Parliament which meets in Toronto Deceember 26th to 28th inclusive.

J. Larmer, the local candidate, came third in the competition, S. Symons, of Bowmanville, taking second place. A Stinson, of Janetville, was fourth.

Voting in Port Hope, which is entitled to a separate candidate of its own, took place on Friday when Foster Hamilton, the Presbyterian, nominee, was elected, Bruce Hyne, representing the Methodist C.S.E.T. group, being the defeated candidate. Gordon Lapp, of Brighton, is the Independent candidate for Premier in the fourth Parliament. The boys throughout the Province are taking a keen interest in the election of their representatives, and the platform which each is supporting.

The thirty-fourth annual convention of the Cavan and South Monaghan Religious Education Council will be held in the Frazerville church on Monday, December 8, the afternoon session commencing at 1.45 p.m., and the evening gathering at 7.30 o'clock.

Among the speakers will be Rev. L. Currie, of Toronto, who will also address a similar gathering for the Manvers Sunday School workers at Janetville, the following day. Rev. R. T .Richads, Rev. G. S. Gervan and others.

A. E. Sanderson, of Fairmount, is president, and Hubert Gardiner, of Mount Pleasant, secretary-treasurer. Reports from all superintendents of departments, and individual Sunday Schools, will be asked for at the convention. The public is cordially invited to attend both sessions, and all schools are urged to be well represented.

A CHRISTMAS STORY

Two little children coming out of Sunday school where evidently reference had been made to his Satanic Majesty, were discussing in their childish way the lesson. "Do you believe there is a devil?" asked one. "Naw," said the other, "it's just like Santa Claus; it's your father."

FARM-PROBLEMS

COSTS ONLY 91 CENTS A BUSHEL TO GROW WHEAT ON PRAIRIE SAY UNITED STATES INVESTIGATORS OF CANADIAN CONDITIONS INDICATING THAT FARMERS HERE HAVE $90,000,000 TO SPEND Average Profit Would Be 34 Cents a Bushel If There Were No Objections to U. S. Assumptions — Coolidge Believed His Experts.

TARIFF COMMISSION SPENT THOUSANDS IN GATHERING DOMINION STATISTICS

Canadian Figures Showing Signs of Sanity Indicate Balance Between Cost and Receipts—Only Reliable Finding Is Of Importance to Farming.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 3.—It cost, according to the Tariff Commission of the United States, which spent a good many thousand dollars to find out, 91 cents a bushel to grow wheat in Western Canada in the three years from 1921 to 1923 inclusive. That is the cost of wheat delivered at the elevator. Assuming that the farmer is getting an average price this year at his elevator of $1.25, he will make an average profit of 34 cents a bushel, or on 270,000,000 bushels of wheat a total profit of $91,800,000. Consequently, farmers are going to have over 90 million dollars to spend. That would be interesting if true. But there are some objections to the calculation.

President Coolidge showed sufficient faith in this calculation of 91 cents to increase the duty on wheat entering the United States from 30 to 42 cents a bushel, in order to equalize the costs of placing wheat on the American market between the farmer in the United States and the farmer in Canada.

The Tariff Commission used identical methods in calculating costs in both countries, and so were probably right as to the difference, although it would be quite possible for them to make corresponding errors or corresponding omissions in each county without affecting the validity of their conclusions as to the difference in costs.

When the Tariff Commission sent its investigators into Canada they chose a number of typical points and typical farmers, and proceeded to find the cost of raising wheat for each. They took every individual operation, through summer fallowing, plowing, cultivation, seeding, harvesting, threshing and hauling grain to the elevator, and arrived a price per acre for each. Not knowing what such operations would cost each individual farmer, they ascertained the contract rate at which each operation could be performed, and allowed that rate.

Nobody Knows.

With a farmer growing grain solely, a lot would depend on whether he had sufficient acreage to give himself and his outfit adequate employment, while for the farmer whose operations were diversified it would be important to know if the other operations around the farm yielded him a return sufficient to enable him to accept the contract rate of pay for his operations in the wheat fields. Nobody knows. But if you are going to make calculations of this sort you have to make some assumptions. It is perhaps not out of the way to assume that the contract rate for doing various jobs would yield a farmer a living for himself and upkeep for his outfit.

But next you have to make an adjustment on account of taxes. Taxes were left out of consideration by the Tariff Commission, but they can in no wise be left out of the calculations of the farmer. You could estimate those for the period reviewed by the commission at from 5 to 10 cents a bushel to be added to the 91 cents.

Then you find that the Tariff Commission made an allowance for the use of land in its cost calculations, either the cash rental at which land could be obtained or 8 per cent. on the stated value of the land in use. It happens that the two worked out to nearly the same thing, so only the later method need be considered. But in an allowance for the use of land part of the cost of raising wheat? Emphatically yes, in so far as the land is mortgaged and interest payments have to be met. Emphatically no, with respect to whatever equity in the land is owned by the farmer himself, whether he paid for it in cash or has acquired it by the advance in land values. The lands which were studied by the Tariff Commission in Canada ranged in stated value from a low of $11.71 per acre to a high of $53.20, representing an annual charge per acre ranging from $1 to $3 per acre. Certainly not all this would represent revenue to a farmer himself. Perhaps the farmer's portion of this would come somewhere near meeting the charge for taxes, which would bring us back to the figure of 91 cents a bushel. After making all these allowances you are tempted to say, "Well, let's call it a dollar a bushel," and to recall the statement that many farmers have repeatedly made in the past two years, that if they could be assured of a dollar a bushel net at the elevator for their wheat, before paying handling and transportation charges, they would be content.

Question Of Yield.

But here the question of yield comes in. Most of the farmer's expenses on his crop are incurred without reference to the actual yield. They can be considered on an acreage basis. Turning to the cost per acre figures of the U. S. Tariff Commission it is seen that they calculate the costs of growing wheat in Western Canada at from $10.52 to $17.48 per acre during a three year period, without land charges, according to district. Make an arbitrary adjustment of these figures to allow for the very light threshing and hauling costs on light crops, and heavy costs for the same items and some exceptionally heavy crops and you arrive at from $12 to $15 per acre. Be safe and call it $14 for the average. To add say $3 per acre to cover land charges and taxes and you have $17 an acre. You must adjust this figure again to cover loss on seed, for the farmer has to replace his seed of last year's crop with seed for the next crop worth 50 cents a bushel more, or 75 cents an acre. Throw in the odd quarter and you have $18 per acre. You can say without much danger of strenuous contradiction that the farmer who realizes $18 an acre net for his wheat at the elevator is probably breaking even, and that more will enable him to get ahead or to reduce his indebtedness. Try that figure for the whole wheat acreage, and you get $250,000,000; while at an elevator the wheat crop would be worth $350,000,000. Ignore the odd six million dollars as being attributable to hidden errors and you have cost and return just above balancing each other for the whole of Western Canada. Our figures at least bear the mark of sanity, but it should be noted that if we are out a dollar an acre on the cost it throws the calculation out by nearly twenty million dollars; if we are out ten million bushels on the yield it throws the calculation twelve and a half million dollars out of line; while ten cents a bushel on the average price makes a difference of over twenty-seven million dollars. Possibly the errors balance each other; if cumulative they might throw us out fifty or sixty million dollars. (With reference to the average price it must be noted that from 11½ to 23 cents a bushel must be allowed to cover freight and handling charges from time of receipt at elevator before arriving at the Fort William price; that much of the grain is low grade and sells at very large discounts under the quoted prices for No. 1 northern, while on the other hand considerable premiums for spot delivery are earned on a large volume.)

Again one is tempted to hazard a guess, drawn partly from calculation and partly from general knowledge and observation, that a total of from thirty to forty million dollars will be written off from farmers' indebtedness as a result of this year's crop. It will be distributed among country merchants, wholesalers, banks, mortgage companies and tax collectors.

Importance Of Industry.

But we started out these calculations with the spending power of the farmer in mind. We have calculated away the profit or devoted it to the payment of debts. Has the farmer's purchasing power vanished in the calculation. Not at all. It is the current turnover of this business of farming that is important. A business with a total cash return of $350,000 is a pretty important thing to other businesses, even if the whole receipts are used up in the living of the proprietors and their establishments. You do not calculate the importance of an industry to the country by the amount of dividends drawn out. And you must note especially in the farm turnover, on the basis of just breaking even, is included a return on the capital invested, or on that very considerable proportion of the capital invested which is borrowed. The business is going on again next year, again with a necessary turnover of from three hundred to three hundred and fifty million dollars. Some debts paid off this year will simply mean the reestablishment of credit for another year's operations. Make all allowances necessary for such purely financial transactions as are involved in the purchase of land and the payment of interest on mortgages and debts and you come to the conclusion that the business of raising wheat in Western Canada involves the expenditure on actual purchases of merchandise and material of from two hundred to two hundred and fifty million dollars.

How those expenditures are likely to be distributed is another story, but at least it is clear that there is big business here.—F. P.

Putting The Holes In Cheese

The jokesmiths have long made much of the holes in cheese.

These holes have been a mystery to the layman, but not to the scientist, who knows they are caused by certain gas-producing bacteria.

Some other cheeses have holes poked in them by a machine. The outfit with a part resembling a bird cage, as shown in the picture, is used for perforating roquefort cheese in the factories where it is made. The perforations make it possible for the green mould which gives the cheese its peculiar flavor to spread thoroughly. This method was introduced by dairy specialists in the Department of Agriculture.

MAKING COCOA AND CHOCOLATE

FAVORITE RECIPES.

The making of cocoa and chocolate is a delightful occupation to folks who enjoy their taste as much as I do. I consider the most important factor in their preparation the cooking of the starch, which prevents the beverage from having a raw or uncooked flavor. I mix the chocolate or cocoa with water and sugar. The mixture is boiled until it takes on a glossy appearance. This indicates that the starch grains are broken down and cooked thoroughly. My favorite recipes for making cocoa and chocolate are as follows:

Mix six tablespoonfuls of cocoa and three and one-half tablespoonfuls of sugar with one and one-half cupfuls of hot water. Boil, stirring constantly, until the mixture is smooth and glossy. Add one quart of milk, and heat to the scalding point. Stir in one-eighth tablespoonful salt and one-fourth teaspoonful vanilla. Beat with a Dover egg beater until the beverage is smooth. Serve garnished with whipped cream or marshmallows, placing one teaspoonful of the cream or one marshmallow in every cup filled with the cocoa.

Cut one and three-fourths squares of chocolate in small pieces, or grate it, and melt over water in the upper part of the double boiler. Add one-fourth cupful of sugar, one-eighth teaspoonful of salt and one and one-half cupfuls of hot water. Cook, stirring constantly, until the mixture is smooth and glossy. Pour in four and one-half cupfuls scalded milk, reheat and beat just before serving.

PEAT IS SHOWN AS FERTILIZER

Newest Recruit to Ranks Tried With Success In U. S.

USED AS POWDER.

CHICAGO, Dec. 3.—Peat is the newest recruit to the ranks of fertilizers.

Recent experiments have shown that peat possesses almost miraculous powers in rejuvenating the soil. In addition, it is the cheapest of the fertilizers on the market.

A vast peat deposit 10 to 30 feet deep in Whiteside County, Ill., is being used entirely for fertilizing purposes.

The peat is excavated from along the banks of a small canal and then allowed to dry out for a day or two. Afterward it is allowed to cure for a week or 10 days in a mill, then fed into a huge cylinder heated to a temperature of 1,700 degrees Fahrenheit, and next ground into the form of a dark brown powder.

The powder is without odor and so clean that it may be handled without causing the slightest smut or stain.

Besides its value as a fertilizer, it has been found that peat in this powdered form has considerable merit as an ingredient in the composition of feed mixtures for cattle.

RAINS BRING SULPHUR.

Three to 50 pounds of sulphur per acre are added to the soil by rainfall. The amount of sulphur lost in drainage water has frequently been larger, tending to reduce the sulphur content of the soils to the point essential for most profitable production.

Christmas Articles

From now until Christmas each Farm Page will carry special articles and stories in keeping with the season, which, while intended first of all for country schools and farm homes will be of interest and help to city cousins.

The next Farm Page will have a Christmas Pageant entitled "A Little Fir Tree's Christmas." This little play is quite simple and can be adapted by school teachers to the number of pupils they have available, with a week's practice.

Another article will describe attractive ways of wrapping and tying parcels; while others will be "A Story of Candles"; Christmas Gifts by Garden Lovers" and "Samuel Pepy's Christmas."

CASTLES OF SPRING TUMBLE IN AUTUMN

Ambitions Greater When New Life Stirs in Winter Killed Earth.

By Evelyn Mason.

I consider spring-time the most enjoyable and interesting period of the farm year.

Early in the spring when the nights are still frosty, but the days are nice and warm, the sap starts to run. We bore a hole in the tree with a brace and bit and drive one of the little spiles into it. A tin (made for that purpose) is hung on a wire which is attached to the spile. Then about every day we go around and gather the sap in large cans.

One night, later on, our neighbours come over and we have the sugaring-off.

Following the maple sugar time the barn-yard seems all aglow with new life.

One morning when I went out to feed the chickens I heard "peep, peep, peep." I looked around and found "Old Speckles" with thirteen wee, fluffy, yellow chicks. While I was admiring them I heard "ba-a-a." I turned around and saw old Nanny with two, dear, little lambs.

I ran to the house as fast as my legs could carry me to tell the good news to the rest.

Dad worked in the fields while mother and I planted the garden and tended to our flower beds.

I think our ambitions are greater in the spring than any other time of the year. We look forward to great prospects. We build castles in the air, but in the fall they sometimes turn out different than we expected.

About Ourselves

The prize stories were left off the last Farm Page by the printer after he had promised to put them on. There are two of the stories here today.

* * *

All kinds of nice things are in store for the boy and girl readers of the Farm Page in the next three weeks. There will be Christmas cards that you can color and give to your friends; hints for simple little gifts you can make in a day for mother and father, and two more opportunities to win money with which to brighten Christmas.

The Examiner has arranged for a very helpful series of articles on the building of farm equipment. These will be illustrated by photographs and detail drawings showing every step in construction.

The pageant which will appear on the next Farm Page can be prepared in a few days; needs no great amount of scenery, and will interest everyone, young and old, who sees it. Make it the centre of your Christmas entertainment.

P.E.I. PRODUCTION.

Island Province Has Produce Valued at $11,000,000—Seizes Opportunities.

HALIFAX, N. S., Dec. 3.—The estimated value of the 1924 field crops of Prince Edward Island is $7,000,000. Fox farming will add $3,000,000, and fisheries another million. It was only a few years ago when the Island discovered the bonanza of fox-raising. Another such economic advantage would seem to be opening in the seed potato market in the Southern States. By the end of the year, it is estimated that 160,000 bushels of seed stock will have been sold there. The area given over to seed potatoes has doubled. Egg production netted $900,000 for 4,000,000 eggs. Live stock will bring about $500,000, and oats, the largest crop of the Province, $1,250,000.

CANADA FAST BECOMING FOODSHOP OF AMERICA INDICATED IN SPEECH BY PRESIDENT COOLIDGE WHEN HE PAVES THE WAY FOR TARIFF REMOVAL

Deep Significance For Future of Canada in Statement that United States Will Soon be Importer of Foodstuffs —Brightens the Farm Outlook.

AGRICULTURE IN DOMINION RETARDED BY LACK OF CONTIGUOUS MARKETS

Opening of Territory With 120,000,000 Purchasers of Farm Products Would Solve Problem for Many Years to Come—Recent Radical Changes.

Of primary interest in business circles is the large-scale trade expansion now indicated in the United States, accompanied by a continuation of the speculative security market movement which began after the elections. A situation about which less has been heard, but which has deep significance for the future of Canada, arises out of a statement made by President Coolidge, that the United States must shortly become a large importer of farm products and food commodities. The importance to Canada of such a development is beyond calculation.

There can be no doubt that the stock market activity has some implication with regard to business expansion. The question, however, arises as to how far this business boom has already been discounted by the markets. From the investment standpoint, the movement appears to be distinctly speculative. In some lines prices are being pushed farther than would appear to be justified, and some of the most astute business observers are advising caution.

The Farm Outlook.

Decidedly the most British factor in Canadian business arises out of the recent radical change in farm conditions. The purchasing power of the farmer has almost reached its high level of 1920, and world crop conditions strongly suggest still higher prices. Information just received indicates that Argentina's wheat crop will be only 190,332,000 bushels, as against 247,038,000 bushels last year, a decrease of approximately 23 per cent. The wheat crop of Europe, excluding Russia, which is the other large factor in prices, will not exceed 1,112,884,000 bushels, while last year's crop was 1,263,000,000 bushels. The world supply will be somewhere about 400,000,000 smaller than that of last year, and an unusually small carry-over is in prospect. All these factors point to higher wheat prices and consequently better business in Canada. Another important factor relating to farm conditions has been referred to above. In the address above referred to, President Coolidge stated that the time is fast approaching when the United States will be one of the greatest importers of agricultural produce. He intimated that with the growth of industrialization the United States will not much longer be able to meet her own requirements in grains, meats and foodstuffs. While the United States now has virtually prohibitive tariff rates against these products from Canada, such cannot be the case when the United States becomes definitely an importer of these products. In fact, although the President made no specific reference to the question, there is a strong possibility that his statement was actually the beginning of a process of paving the way for a withdrawal of these tariffs. When farm prices were low, their existence was justified to offset the unfavorable position of the farmer. With the adjustment that has taken place in farm values, such a justification no longer exists.

As indicated above, such a situation would be of inestimable value to Canada. Today our farm population is greater than our urban population. We lack contiguous markets for the consumption of our farm products. The opening up of a market of 120,000,000 people to Canadian farm products would solve the problem markets for Canada for many years to come.

Preparation Means Production

Winter is the time for the farmer to improve his equipment so he may reap greater benefits during summer.

To help him do this the Examiner is beginning a series of features telling him how he may build efficient equipment, improve his stock and cultivate his land to the best advantage.

The first of these articles, as simple as it is complete in detail, explains the construction of a self-feeder for pigs, the kind that saves money, time and labor for the farmer.

Other articles will tell how to build simple, cheap and sturdy poultry houses, livestock shipping crates and equally essential farm equipment.

Watch the Farm Page for these interesting articles.

Campbellford Man Has Prized Black Minorca

CAMPBELLFORD, Dec. 3.—Mr. Robert Rooksby of Seymour has a black Minorca hen fourteen years old and she is still laying eggs.

This hen is prized by the owner as his mother, who is now dead, gave it to him when it was a young pullet. Mr. Rooksby says no money could buy the hen, as he would not part with it for any price.'

NEW PRIZE-WINNING TWO-YEAR-OLD

WARREN, Minn., Dec. 3.—World's record in milk production for senior two-year-olds is now claimed by Queen Bessie Pietertje Ormsby, a Holstein owned by C. L. Spaulding, near here.

In a 365 days' test, Queen Bessie produced 24,587.6 pounds of milk and 895.63 pounds of butterfat, equivalent to 1,119.5 pounds of butter.

Queen Bessie is a granddaughter of the famous Holstein sire, Sir Pietertje Ormsby Mercedes.

Great Britain, Switzerland and Holland have an average annual yield of 600 pounds of milk or more, per cow.

Canada Exports Wheat To Fifty-three Countries

OTTAWA, Dec. 3.—Of the 14,288,162 bushels of wheat exported during October, the United Kingdom was the biggest buyer, having purchased 11,007,460 bushels; Belgium took 1,001,542 bushels, the Netherlands 497,837 bushels and Germany 385,952 bushels. It had been thought that the higher wheat prices had put Japan pretty well out of the market, but she came back again, taking 301,388 bushels.

The biggest buyer of Canadian flour during the month was Germany, which took 415,160 barrels. The United Kingdom came next, taking 317,245 barrels, Newfoundland took 57,588 barrels, the Netherlands 36,234, Norway 68,719 barrels, Poland 32,993 and Trinidad and Tobago 32,099 barrels.

The growth of Canadian wheat exports is to be seen in the fact that during October shipments were made to 53 different countries. No other important Canadian industry can show such a wide export field, milling having supplanted the automobile industry in this respect. It is also to be noted that this trade has been built up in spite of very heavy competition from the United States, which formerly had much the upper hand in this branch of foreign business.

FORGOT HERSELF.

Dick—I never saw Jones look so cheerful and self-reliant as he does today. I wonder what caused the change?

Charles—He told me a book agent asked to see the head of the house last night, and his wife called him.

"Perhaps you can explain, Marie, how it was that I saw you kissing the chauffeur in the kitchen?"

"I'm sure I don't know, ma'am, unless you were looking through the keyhole!"

OPEN TO EVERY BOY AND GIRL

GIRL FELL IN LOVE WITH A CIGARETTE

Majority of Girls Have Habit of Dropping Into Matrimony.

By Loretta Morrissey.

Everyone has a certain vocation or calling in life. From the time they are children they will always express the wish to become school teachers, or doctors, lawyers, nurses, or, as many boys do, take a training so as to be able to hold a position on a train, which I would not advise any boy to do. The majority of girls when they are between the ages of twenty and thirty become brides, and many girls remain old maids. I know a girl who, when she was in her 'teens, fell in love with a young man just on account of the way he held a cigarette between his fingers.

I have already discussed in general the vocations people choose. Now I am going to discuss my own vocation. Ever since I was a little child I always expressed the wish to be a school teacher and I am now fifteen, and I still express that wish. Teaching, I think, is the most paying profession in those days when the whole cry of the people is "money".

I am now in second form in high school and I think if I am able to continue my progress for two more years, I will soon become what I wish to be. I have four miles to walk to school and I have come to the conclusion that with wealth goes work, and one must never cease trying until one has succeeded.

STOP THAT COUGH NOW!

WITH A FEW DOSES OF DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP

Mrs. Alex. Foster, R.R. No. 2, Proton, Ont., writes: "I took a severe cold which settled on my lungs, and my cough was so bad, at times, it seemed as if it were tearing my lungs to pieces. I sent and got a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and I got relief after the first few doses, and by the time I had finished the rest of the bottle I was completely relieved of both my cold and cough."

dates in whose campaigns he had more recently interested himself, Inspector Robert mentioned Napoleon Sequin, Ald Rielle and Ald. Martin. He believed Chief Belanger had given orders a year ago forbidding constables to take part in municipal elections. He had no knowledge of policemen ever taking part in the work of impersonating electors.

Witness swore that he had not recently transferred any of his life properties to other names, not even those of his children. A Mrs. Beauregard had once been a tenant of his, but he denied that he had had her husband put off the police force.

Asked if he knew that illegal operations were practised in Montreal, the inspector said he did not. He did not know that there were certain houses in a district counsel named where these things were done.

"You have never heard of these things?" "No."

"And you are an inspector of the Montreal police?" "Yes."

Mr. Lavery mentioned the name of a doctor, and asked withness if he had heard that there were people like him, who are engaged in the illegal practice of medicine. Witness replied that he had heard of some such cases and believed that a liquor case had been made.

Didn't Sign Testimonial.

Counsel also asked if the inspector knew another doctor, who was named, and "who was only a charlatan." Witness did not recall him.

"Did you ever sign a certificate for him testifying to the excellence of one of his patent medicines?" I never signed it."

"On your oath?" "I swear."

The inspector said he had heard of gaming systems for baseball games and arrests had been made in connection with them.

"Have you heard that there are many cases of incendiarism in Montreal?" "I have read of them in the newspapers."

Mr. Justice Coderre remarked that that was a matter for the first commissioner's court.

Witness said he did not know that it was necessary for insurance companies to form a special force for their own protection.

Denies Accepting Bribe.

he inspector denied he had charged $4 for constables sent to a race-track, and that he had kept $2 for himself. He also repeated his denial to the suggestion that he had been bribed to the tune of $200 in connection with a license for a man named April. He thought the great majority of policemen were honest, conscientious men, who did their duty. her would no doubt be an exception here and there.

H Levine of the Dominion Cord and Tassel Company, said several thousands of dollars worth of silk threads and other goods had been stolen from his premises in October, 1921. After Detectives McCann and Belanger had been working on the case for a few days, a man named Orwitz, had come to witness and said that most of the goods were being taken into the States, because the thieves could not dispose of them here. Orwitz had denied he was one of the thieves, and when witness asked the detectives why they did not arrest the man, they had replied that they could not as they had no case against him.

How Goods Were Returned.

Some time later, said witness, the detectives had told him that someone was willing to return the goods for $100. He had gone to Drapeau and left a check for $100 and a few days later was called to police headquarters to identify some of his goods valued at $900 or $1,000. Witness did not know what Drapeau had done with the check.

Detective Emil Drapeau, called to the stand, said two men had come to him with the stolen goods in their car and he had given them the $100. They had first demanded $300, but Mr. Levine had refused to pay that sum. Witness declared he had given all the money to the two men None if it had been given to any of the Montreal police.

Constable F. Charette testified that after he had been suspended, the policeman's union had discovered that Capt. Morin had employed a dope addict and an unfortunate woman in an effort to catch him taking money from unlawful frequenters of a park. He had not taken money and when his case had been heard by the chief he had been reinstated

Polic Cashier Denies Allegation.

N. Demers, a cashier in the police court office emphatically denied that he had been paid $100, or any money, by Charles Gauthier, gaming house keeper. Gauthier insisted that he had paid Demers at the latter's home but could not give any address, but when checks referred to by Gauthier were looked up it was found they were dated 1919, whereas the incident is alleged to have occurred in 1921.

Mrs. Gauthier declared she lived on good terms with her husband, had never had any quarrel with him, had never left him, and had never boarded with Police Capt. Ainey, who had married her sister. Her husband had told her several times that he was going to draw money to pay for protection.

Inspector Produces Bank Books

Inspector Roberts was then called and produced his bank books. He testified that he had earned $475 in 1901, when he joined the force. His pay had steadily increased, until now he got $3,000 a year. He had drawn $37,546 in salary during twenty-four years. He owned four houses and a vacant lot. One of the houses had cost him $5,000, another $3,000, and another $1,800. He had $1,200 in one bank account and $20 in another.

Witness said he had not speculated but had revenue from six of his ten living children. This had totalled $24,480 since 1920.

The inspector said he had lent money to Chief Balenger both before and after he had been made inspector, but this had nothing to do with his promotion.

WORN OUT MEN AND WOMEN SOON REGAIN STRENGTH

The nervous system is the vital force of your body; the force that gives energy to every organ and every muscle. So great is the power of the nerves that a tremendous shock, such as fear, may cause death.

A lesser nerve shock will pale the cheeks, make the knees tremble, cause the heart to beat wildly or awe quickly regain lost strength.

To keep our vitality and strength we must nourish the nervous system. When we restore lost nerve power we quickly regain losto strength.

Nervous, exhausted men and women can soon regain their nerve force and as they rebuild their nerves they see the signs of returning vigor.

Wincarnis gives to the nerves the very elements they must have to be nourished back to energy. For fifty years this nerve restorative has reinvigorated those who were weak, thin pale and so discouraged that life seemed to hold no real happiness.

If you need more nerve power go to your druggist today and begin the safe Wincarnis treatment. A sixteen ounce bottle, which is a fourteen day Wincarnis treatment, is sold by all leading druggists for $1.50. Wincarnis is so effective that only three tablespoonsful a day need be taken.

Try Wincarnis and see the difference just a few days will bring.

REBEL LEADERS WERE EXECUTED

One Hundred and Thirty Rebels Were Killed in Crushing Revolution.

CHECKED IN TIME.

LIMA, Peru, Dec. 3. — (United Press).—The crusing of an abortive revolutionary effort in which 130 rebels were killed and their leaders captured and executed, was made known by the Government to-day.

The movement was designed to embarrass President Leguia at the time of the important celebrations on the anniversary of the Battle of Avachuco.

The abortive uprising occurred in the remote mountain district of Chota Province, according to the official communique. A nucleus of revolutionary leaders, including Arturo Osores, Manuel Alcazar and Lieutenant Barreda, entered Peru from the Ecuadorean frontier, penetrating to the town of Cota, north of Cajamarca, and gathering three or four hundred men from the outlaw element in this notorious district.

The Government immediately concentrated troops on the district, the Federal forces attacking Chato on November 29. The rebels lost 130 killed and many prisoners were taken, only a few of the insurrectors escaping. Alcazar and Barreda were captured, court martialed and shot. The capture of Osores is expected shortly.

HERRIOT OPPOSES TEACHING GERMAN

Other 69 of Ten or More Children Are in the Provinces.

PARIS, Dec. 3. — (Canadian Press).—"France cannot be called upon to assist in the development of the German language in Alsace," Premier Herriot yesterday told the Chamber of Deputies in opposing demands made by the Socialist deputy, M. Peirotes, Mayor of Strasbourg, and the Rev. Muller, deputy from the Lower Rhine, that the Alsatian schools be made absolutely bilingual. The Premier advocated the continuance of the present system and was sustained by the Chamber. German is now taught in the schools of Alsace, from three to four hours weekly and religious teaching, occupying three or four hours a week, may be given in German.

"Instead of assisting in the development of the German language," said the Premier, "our task in Alsace is to do everything possible to facilitate the spreading of the French language."

The Rev. Muller, during the discussion which came up in the voting on the Alsace-Lorraine public construction budget, said: "When we were under the German regime we defended with all our strength our right to continue to speak French. We ask for the same right now on behalf of German, which is a popular language in Alsace. The Alsatian dialect itself is derived from German."

WESLEY'S PRESBYTERIAN GOWN

What will be the pulpit garb of the clergy of the United Church of Canada? asks the Toronto Star, proceeding to reproduce a painting of John Wesley in Geneva gown, long cassock with girdle and pulpit bands as suggestion.

The church union committee also has issued a bulletin with the pictures of Knox, Milton and Wesley, and, curiously enough to us moderns, the Methodist founder was the only one of the trio wearing the garb usually associated with the shorter catechism.

At least one Methodist preacher of our day, Rev. Trevor Hughes Davies, D.D., of Toronto, wears Wesley's gown and bands in the pulpit, and his resemblance in appearance to his gentle leader has been remarked.

It is a far cry from the circuit rider of 150 years ago, in knee breeches and gaiters, to the voluminous gowns of modern city pulpits, but there may be a happy medium for the future. Wesley might serve as a precedent, for his garb was quite Calvinistic, even if his theology was of milder flame.

FRENCH SLUSH FUNDS ENQUIRY

Commission Appointed to Investigate Deputies' Expenditures in Last Campaign.

CAUSE OF PROBE.

PARIS, Dec. 3.—A special commission of inquiry into the use of "slush funds" by all the political parties was created Tuesday. The commission is to inquire into the amounts of money spent by deputies in the parliamentary campaign last May.

The commission is to be composed of eighteen deputies who are supporters of the government and fifteen members from the opposition ranks. The names of the commissioners will come up for ratification in the chamber of deputies on Friday and the commission will begin its work on Saturday.

On November 28, the Chamber of Deputies voted almost unanimously for a special commission of inquiry into the election funds during the 1924 campaign. An effort was made by members of the right to extend the investigation to the 1919 elections. This was opposed by the government, and Premier Herriot made a question of confidence in the government. The vote was against the proposal. It was 299 to 246, which represented the smallest margin in a vote of confidence along strict party lines which M. Herriot had received since he assumed power.

The decision to investigate the alleged "slush funds" came after an acrimonious debate, the outgrowth of a statement by Deputy Taittinger that M. Raynaldy, Minister of Commerce, had accepted 10,000 francs from the electoral organization of the right parties and then had campaigned for the left parties and become a minister in a left government. Raynaldy admitted having received the money from the right organizations in November 1923 when he was a member of the right, but he said he broke with the "rightists" in December of the same year. There was an uproar in the chamber during which enraged deputies of the right shoulted "resign" and "give back the money."

Attacked "Right" Group

Raynaldy said the money had not been used for personal or electoral purposes but was put into his newspaper, the Courriere De L'Aveyron. Extracts from the newspaper under date of December, 1923, which bitterly attacked the Right Group's policy, brought the Rightists to their feet and the disturbance that ensued was so great that the president of the chamber threatened to suspend the sitting.

Raynaldy charged that his defeat opponent, General De Castelnau, was responsible for "Taittinger's manoeuvre". This brought forth severe denuncitation by the opposition, who declared Raynaldy had no right to attack such a brilliant soldier and patriotic Frenchman as General De Castelnau.

Premier Herriot declared that although De Castelnau's military character could not be questioned, the fact that he had worn the uniform did not mean his political ideas could not be discussed "especially when he directs against the republic assaults of which we are aware".

The premiers' address was punctuated by shouts of "Give back the money," and the phrase was heard along the boulevards as the deputies emerged from the chamber.

CHIVALRY NOT AN OBSOLETE IDEAL

Dwells in Hearts of Men and Guides Many Acts.

Speaking on the subject "Chivalry Ancient and Modern," in the Collegiate hall last evening, John Lewis Paton, M.A., retiring headmaster of the noted Manchester Grammar School, said that chivalry, which is believed by many to have passed out with knighthood, still flourishes throughout the world and that the return of the golden age which once ruled in England will be upon us before very many years.

Chivalry as it reigned in the past and as it reign at present was described by the speaker in a most sympathetic and inspiring manner.

The medieval knight was chivalrous, not only because he rode a horse, but because he was brave, loyal and true. He was better equipped and armed than the man on foot and he was looked up to. When an advance was to be made he was the one to go ahead and the one to make it. In the time of Peter the hermit, knighthood advanced and so did chivalry. Knights held victory as high honor, but they were alway chivalrous in their victories.

The speaker declared that Edward Burke the noted English author was wrong when he said that chivalry was dead and the glory of Europe was gone.

Hundreds of thousands of women were killed as witches in the time of Knighthood in England. Evil gets its power over us only by shedding its grossness. The unborn grace of life is in us all. Without this we could not travel about. Play the game fairly and cleanly and you will get more joy out of it.

"I protest against young girls serving drinks in public houses, ball rooms to half drunk men." When women do things we expect them to, we do not appreciate them half enough. We do not regard ourselves as employing women to do the house work. All the same the work is there for them to do and they don't work nine hours a day and six days a week, but still we don't pay them.

There is chivalry with both young and old. Many know what is the right thing to do, but many do not do not do it. How is it, the speaker asked, that when boys leave school they learn all the evils of the world in a short time. The old take the young and show them how to spend their money in a man's way as they call it. Gambling and revelry is soon picked up by the young. Why do the men in industry, drag the young after them into the evils of the world? Mr. Paton emphatically remarked that there was no chivalry in this, but when a man will go out somebody else he is doing a chivalrous deed. Every man takes jolly good care that he is not cheated by others, but when a man takes as much care that he is not cheating others he is chivalrous. Honesty is chivalry and there is becoming more honesty in the world everyday. The young can be chivalrous to the old as well as the old can be to the young. Mr. R. J. Bolton, Principal of King Edward School presided.

ALBERTA GIVEN LIQUOR STORES

But No Provision For Sale of Beer in Licensed Premises Appeals in New Bill.

LOCAL OPTION, TOO.

REGINA, Sask., Dec. 3.—(Canadian Press).—No provision for the sale of beer in licensed premises is made in the bill for the Government control of liquor which was introduced in the Legislature Tuesday by Hon. J. A. Cross, Attorney-General. Provision is made, however, for the establishment of stores where purchases may be made not exceeding one quart of spirituous liquors, two gallons of wine and four gallons of beer daily. The new bill, the result of a plebiscite last summer, which gave a large mapority against the Saskatchewan Temperance Act, will be given its second reading on Friday.

Provision is made for local option in cities and districts.

An official summary of the bill sets out the following as its main clauses:

The business is to be managed by a board, to consist of one, two or three members, as the Government decides.

No provision is made for the sale of beer on licensed premises.

General liquor stores may be established by the board in each of the seven cities and the town of Yorkton.

Stores For Beer.

The rest of the province is divided into districts in which the board may establish stores for the sale of beer only.

The board shall not establish beer stores in any district other than the cities and the town of Yorkton without first giving 30 days' notice of their intention.

People of the districts may petition against establishment, in which case the board shall not proceed to establish until a vote of the people has been taken to find out if it was the desire to vote establishment of stores in their district.

The people of the city district have the right to vote out stores at any time after establishment, and the people of other districts have the right to vote out their stores in their districts after expiration of two years from establishment.

In Sealed Cartons.

All liquor is to be sold in sealed packages and for cash only.

Doctors, druggists, dentists, veterinaries are to be in the same position as under the present Act, and may supply liquor under prescription and permit.

The board is not charged with the enforcement of the Act. Enforcement rests with the Provincial and municipal police under the sunervision of the Department of the Attorney-General in the same manner as other Acts.

MISSING FOUR DAYS.

Two Cobalt Men Are Believed to Have Been Drowned in Larder Lake.

COBALT, Dec. 3. — (Canadian Press)—Eli Thieb, pioneer of Charlton district, where his wife and large family reside, and a man named Wills, have been missing for four days, and fears are entertained that they have been drowned in Larder Lake. Provincial Constable Hartleib yesterday telephoned Inspector Moore that a search party had found a canoe adrift, upside down, in the lake, and that efforts were being continued to locate who are thought to have been its occupants. Thieb and Wills, who were en route to the former's claims, left the terminus of the railway Friday night, and no word of them has since been received. The lake is deep and partly frozen over.

YOUNG BOY HAD NARROW ESCAPE

Carried By Sled Almost Under Wheels of Train at Crossing.

AT DONEGAL STREET.

Charlie Jenkins, 10 years of age, had a narrow escape from death at Donegal street crossing this morning when his sled carried him almost under the wheels of a passing train. Only a warning shouted by another child who was standing on the other side of the track averted a tragedy.

The little boy was enjoying the usual snow-time activities, running along a few yards and dropping flat on his sled to coast. Enamoured of his game, he approached the crossing on the sled and was almost upon it when a girl, younger than himself, called to him to "Look out, there's a train." Charlie stopped his sled only a few feet away from the track and scampered off home, a very frightened boy.

Most headaches due to lack of internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons form in the accumulated food waste and are carried to all parts of the body. Headaches follow. Biliousness, insomnia, lack of energy, all result from constipation, which if unchecked will lead to serious results.

Avoid Laxatives—Say Doctors

A noted authority says that laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

HAMILTON MYSTERY IS STILL UNSOLVED

Inquest Into the Death of Joe Baytoisae Adourned Till Monday Next.

HAMILTON, December 3. — For two hours last night Mrs. Nellie Baytoizae was questioned on the witness stand at the continued inquest into the mystery of how her husband Joe Baytoizae, met his death at a lonely spot on the mountain side.

Other witnesses were also questioned but nothing was established that would turn very much light on the affair. The inquest continued until after 11 p.m., and was then adjourned until December 8th.

Baytoizae disappeared from his home on July 31st. His clothed skeleton was found on the mountain side on November 8th by boy scouts who were searching for the body of Fred Genesee, which was found a week later.

The evidence of Mrs. Baytoizae was notable for the light that it threw on the intrigue among the foreigners who derive profits from the trade of bootlegging. Her husband, she said, constantly received threats during the past year that he was alive. He was worried over these threats and said he had been openly acused of being a 'squealer,' and that he feared that he would be killed.

Mrs. Baytoizae admitted that Joe Kominsky, a step brother of her husband, used to bring whiskey to their house, where it was sold. She said that a man named Yacko Skurkan had told a third person that he would kill Baytoizae.

Inspector Cruickshanks said he had often received complaints over the telephone regarding the bootlegging activities of Baytoizae. He believed that enemies of the deceased were responsible for these complaints as they were always made anonimously.

Other witnesses testified that Baytoizae shortly before his disappearance had agreed to deliver seven cases of whiskey to Brantford for some local Italians.

Upon reaching Brantford Baytoizae was unable to make the delivery because of police vigilance.

The liquor was cached in a field, and subsequently disappeared.

Baytoizae was accused by Italians of double crossing them. He was threatened with his life, it was stated. The names of these Italians were not known.

ALGOMA WOLF HUNT CLUB BEEN FORMED

J. W. Curran of the Sault Daily Star Elected President at Meeting Last Night.

SOO, Ont., Dec. 3. — (Canadian Press).—By a unanimous standing vote at a meeting held night to discuss the wolf menace in this district, it was decided to form an Algoma Wolf Hunt Club. J. W. Curran, of the Sault Daily Star, who has purchased in Kentucky a pack of hounds for the club, was elected president, with R. A. Addison his assistant. Duncan Fremlin, of Bar River, is captain and master of the hounds, and it will be he who will try out the hounds on their arrival here, and appoint the day, probably December 9th, for the first hunt, in which over 100 experienced hunters and bushmen have promised to participate. This hunt will be held in the neighborhood of Bar River, where the wolves have created great devastation this season. Farmers there have been practically compelled to abandon sheep and stock raising, and deer, driven by the wolves, flock to the borders of the settlements, seeking protection.

In the spring, hounds will be sent out to track the parent wolves to their lairs, and the whelps will be destroyed before they can prove a menace. It was decided that the bounty on all wolves taken will revert to the club to defray expenses, and that the pelts, if possible, will be the property of the wolf slayer.

Whites of Eyes Tinged With Yellow? Muddy Complexion? Your Liver is Out of Order!

Mrs. Wm. Bourque, Fox Creek, N. B., writes: "I have been troubled with my liver for a long time, and was so bad I could not do any work. I had severe pains in my stomach that were so bad, at times, I could hardly stand them. My tongue became coated; I had a bad taste in my mouth, especially in the morning; the whites of my eyes were tinged with yellow, and I had a muddy complexion.

I had read a great deal about

so decided I would try a vial, and after taking three of them I was greatly improved and felt more like living, and I can now do my own work without any trouble."

THE THIEF OF BAGDAD

BY ACHMED ABDULLAH

He found the cave without much trouble. It shone like an immense jewel, opal and milk-white and emerald green and ruby-red. He walked up to the door that was made of the heart's blood of lovers who had suffered and sacrificed greatly because of their love; and his own love was like a sharp scimitar to the clutch of his hand, his resignation to the sendings of Fate, growing, steadily growing, was like a stout buffalo-hide shield to his elbow.

He laughed fearlessly, carelessly, when from rocks and clumps of coral at the bottom of the lake rose slimy huge octopi that writhed about him with countless sucking, pulpy tentacles. The sword of his love cut their bloated bodies to pieces. The shield of his resignation guarded him against their attack. The strength of his love opened for him the blood-red door. The vision of his resignation pierced for him the cloak of invisibility in which the silver box was wrapped.

He stuffed the cloak—it was as light as thistledown—into his waist shawl—and picked up the magic box. It was small and square. It did not look much like anything precious: just a plain silver box, oxidized by the water, and neither carved nor ornamented.

He rose again through the hundred fathoms, swimming upward steadily, with a full, keen stroke of his powerful shoulders, until he reached the surface of the lake.

He looked about him.

The Old Man of the Midnight Sea had disappeared. So had the boat. It was day. The sun shimmered down with a thousand splintering, golden lances; and, as he swam ashore, he saw there a splendid, snow-white horse, a horse with two immense silver wings, that pawed the ground impatiently with dainty feet and neighed when it saw Ahmed.

Ahmed thought and acted at the same fraction of a second. He jumped on the horse's back

"Off with you!" he cried. "Carry me West—across the Enchanted Garden, the Valley of the Monsters, the Hill of Eternal Fire, and the Valley of the Seven Temptations!"

And the horse spread its silver wings and rose through the air—and we may mention here that the Arab chronicle from which this tale is taken refers to this horse as "The Winged Horse of Imagination."

"For," says this chronicle, "what is love if not imagination? Do we not always imagine the loved one's body and soul to be the most beautiful on earth? Such, doubtless, were Ahmed's thoughts about Zobeid. Nor was he the only one. By the teeth of the Prophet—on Him the salute!—I myself, the scribe of this tale, met in Samarkand a woman, seventy years old, stupid, and who looked exactly like a well-fed pig. Yet I met a man in Samarkand who swore upon the Koran that this woman was so beautiful that she caused the moon to blush with envy and jealousy. Love is, indeed, as blind as a puppy-dog!"

But if love is as blind as a puppy-dog, how blind then is conceit? Conceit of three Princes of Asia, meeting at the little oasis of Terek el-Bey, not far from Bagdad!

Of the three, the Persian's conceit was the most childish. He waddled about the oasis—as the Mongol Prince whispered to a confidential Macnhu clerk of his retinue—"looking for all the world exactly like a cross-breed between a hog and a peahen, having inherited the former's bloated, exaggerated excessive, indecent paunch and the latter's superb, if quaint, vanity."

Indeed that morning, with the help of various servants, slaves, eunuchs, majordomes, coiffeurs, perfumers, dressers, barbers, masseurs, slipper-bearers, turban-twisters, valets color experts, silk experts, velvet experts, skin experts, gland experts, manicurists, chiropodists, chiropractors, and jewellers, the obese little descendant of tough-thewed Iranian warriors had adorned himself as became a Prince and a bridgroome.

They had carefully shaved, painted and powdered his cheeks and chin, except for cute little sidewhiskers that curled like question marks. They had trimmed, pointed, waxed, and scented his mustache. They had arched his eyebrows by plucking out the fine hairs around them with tweezers. They had dyed his hair a gorgeous indigo-blue, training two long, curly lovelocks to hang gracefully down either side of his face like a handsome frame to a handsome painting. They had enlarged the pupils of his eyes by using an infusion of belladonna. They had heightened the color of his lips with the help of betel-nut juice. They had whitened his plump neck by a mysterious Egyptian cosmetic worth its weight in gold. They had reddened the tips of his ears by squeezing them. They had caused his teeth to shine by rubbing copper powder into the roots. They had pointed and gilt his finger-nails and toe-nails. They had stained the palms of his hands and the soles of his feet a delightful and delicate rose with Turkish henna. They had spent seven hours in twisting about his bullet-shaped head a silken turban, blending peach-red with apricot-yellow, sky-blue with sea-green, the whole adorned with a cunning design of bleeding, interlacing lovers' hearts. They had robed his stout body with simple, almost severe magnificence, in a robe of cloth-of-gold embroidered all over with white and yellow diamonds and opening over another robe of the same chaste magnificence, made of cloth-of-silver striped with purple and rose-madder and embroidered over the heart with a design of uncut emeralds that spelled out: "I love thee, Zobeid!" in both the Persian and the Arabic language. His jewels—finger-rings and toe-rings and ear-rings, pendants and necklaces and bracelets and turban aigrettes—were the pick of his treasury; and having never used a weapon in all his life, except knife and fork, perhaps occasionally a toothpick, he had hung about his substantial person a number of wicked-looking weapons.

For his chief barber had told him: "O Great Shah-in-Shah! O Lion of Allah! It has been my experience in life—a life," he had smirked, "not untrodden by narrow, dainty, scented feet of many women—that the ladies admire a warrior, a hero, a clanking, rattling, bullying, swaggering fighting man!"

He had added:

"Wah! The magic, flying carpet! You will hardly need it. Your face and figure alone—without mentioning your soul—are the greatest, rarest gift in the world! Just look into the mirror and convince yourself!"

And the Persian had looked into the mirror—and had been convinced.

The Indian Prince's conceit, while matching the other's, was more simple, more stolid and hard. He was cousin to all the gods. In him Ganesha, the god of wisdom, was reincarnate, as was Shridat, the god of fortune, and Maya, the goddess of illusion.

Having been rather a gay blade during his bachelor years, fond of wine, woman, and song, he had given oath that morning that, as soon as he was married and returned from his honeymoon trip, he would be a model husband and model Rajah.

"By Doorga, the Great Mother!" he had exclaimed: "By the Father of the Elephant's Trunk! I give solemn oath that hereafter I shall turn over a new leaf! Every day of my life I shall perform the proper duties of a Rajah as ordered in the Vedas. I shall rise before daybreak and finish my ablutions! I shall worship the gods, and do obeisance to the Brahmins! I shall not permit my wife, the Princess Zobeid, to contradict me! I shall listen to her advice, and then I shall go and do the opposite! I shall judge my people according to the Shastras and the Laws of Manu, keeping in subjection lust, anger, folly, avarice, drunkenness and pride! I shall not yield to my desire for dancing, singing, playing on musical instruments, gaming and the chase! I shall refrain from sleep during daytime, from molesting men of worth and women of virtue, and from useless travelling— I shall live such an exemplary life that future historians will refer to me as the Father of my country and the Grand Old Man of Hindustan! And in their books these historians shall devote a couple of pages, perhaps an appendix, to the sweetness and beauty of the Princess Zobeid, whom I graciously permitted to share my throne and my life! Ho, Doorga! Ho, Devi! Ho, Smashana Kali!"

But it was the Mongol Prince's conceit which was most justified by fact.

For messengers, travelling post-haste from Bagdad, had brought him news that Fount-in-the-Forest had done her work well. She had succeeded in giving slow poison to her mistress. Even now the latter was on the threshold of death.

WASHINGTON, Dec 2.—Difference of opinion has developed among the members of the debt funding commission over the suggestion that in refunding her four billion debt, France be given better terms, than were granted to Great Britain.

Members who favored a lower interest rate and longer terms payments for France at the commission's session yesterday, were understood to-day to claim the support of President Coolidge. The President let it be known that he considered Great Britain less hard pressed financially than France.

QUEENS RUGBY CAMP DESERTED

Training Broken and Last Meal Was Served at Cafeteria Tuesday.

TEAM "FED UP."

KINGSTON, Dec. 3.—The Queens training quarters were quite deserted looking yesterday, following the definite announcement that there would be no play-off with the Winnipeg Victorias in Toronto on Saturday.

The players, filled up with rugby, were anxious to go out of training and lost no time in leaving quarters and getting back to their boarding houses. The last dinner was served Tuesday in the training quarters and the players will be in the regular student line, with all rugby forgotten for another year.

The players were busy early getting their belongings out of the cafeteria, which has been their home since they came into college in September, and at noon yesterday every bed was cleared and all equipment was being made ready to go back to where it belonged.

PETHERICK'S CORNERS

Change in Teaching Staff at Shea's School.

The trustees having advertised, received large a number of appliactions, and after some discussion at a meeting held on Friday evening, it was decided that Mr. Earl A. Fairman be informed that his application was accepted.

Mr. E. A. Fairman is a brother of Mr. E. S. Fairman, who is teaching at Petherick's Corners.

THREE GAMES TO-NIGHT.

New Montreal Team at Home to Tigers of Hamilton.

MONTREAL, Dec. 3.—(Canadian Press). — Scheduled battles in the National Hockey League will be resumed this evening with a full complement of three games. The new Montreal team will make its home debut against the snappy Hamilton sextet.

Hamilton, by defeating Ottawa last Saturday, showed that they are going to be a squad to be counted on this winter, when the final reckoning is made. Their performance in the opening game leaves them favorites over the Montreal team.

Canadiens will start the same players as won the Stanley Cup and the world's championship honors last season when they play at Ottawa.

Much can happen in a 30-game schedule but a victory for Canadiens will help the champions to a considerable degree and they will be at their full strength for the fray, though minus the services of Odie Cleghorn, who received a severe injury to his eye in the game with St. Pats last Saturday.

MINORS MEETING.

Trades and Sales Discussed By Baseball Magnates.

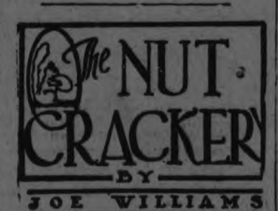
HARTFORD, Conn., Dec. 3.—(Canadian Press). — Discussion of trades and sales was rife at the meeting of the minor league baseball magnates here Tuesday.

Salt Lake City, of the Coast League, reported the sale of Rudy Kallio, an outfielder, to the Boston Red Sox for a cash consideration, Outfielder Connelly and another player to be selected later.

Samuel Robertson, president of the Buffalo Club of the International League, announced that he had placed two players out on option but refused to give out their names.

Judge Arthur Clements, president of the Saginaw Club of the Michigan-Ontario League, announced the sale of Frank Wayenberg, a right-handed pitcher, to the Kansas City Club of the American Association.

Dan. Howley, manager of the Toronto Club of the International League, announced that he had arranged two exhibition games with the Waterbury Club of the Eastern League, Waterbury, Conn., on April 13 and 14.



Jesse James may have had certain distinct moral drawbacks but he never charged six-bits for a wilted chrysanthemum at a football game.

What's become of the old-fashioned prizefighter who used to dazzle the sporting editor with a big fur-collared overcoat?

A quarterback in Ohio had to run 103 yards to score a touchdown. ... What the game needs is better street car service.

The news that American ball players tossed pennies in a fountain in Rome is not unusual. ...Americans are notoriously extravagant abroad.

There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip. ...We don't know the name of the revenue raider who coined that one.

Florida is a wonderful state. .... It must be to stand for the gab of all the golfers who assemble there in the winter.

No football team went through the season without being scored on. ... Looks like they use the rabbit ball on the gridiron, too.

Mr. Sid. Terris of New York is said to be another Benny Leonard. ...Mr. Terris has two ears and a mouth and breathes through his nose.

Personally, we think roller skating is ridiculous but we notice a lot of people fall for it.

Maybe the plan of the South Americans to send a team of amateur fighters to this country is just a cunning scheme to show Firpo up.

Another remarkable thing about bowling is that it is possible to open the season without the president throwing out the first ball.

WHITE SOX AND GIANTS LOST $30,000 ON TRIP.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—John L. McGraw, manager of the New York Giants, and Charles Comiskey, owner of the Chicago White Sox, returned on the Leviathan with the players who made a recent tour of England and France.

None of the party of 83, including players and their wives, was injured during the storm the vessel encountered.

Red Faber, White Sox pitcher, was so seasick, however, he was unable to leave his cabin and Irish Meusel, Giant outfielder, complained that his cabin "creeked so much" he didn't get any sleep on the trip.

McGraw said that the exhibition tour resulted in a loss of $30,000 but he and Comiskey were going back to Europe on the same missionary errand next year and that they were going to take two teams to South America in 1927.

DEATH OF WIFE

It was learned at the prosecutor's office that the stiff examinations given the minister and his two sons on Friday afternoon and night were the result of a communication from Sheatsley.

The minister informed King that he had received a letter from a Chicago woman telling him of the case of a wife who, after a quarrel with her husband, had crawled into a lighted furnace to kill herself. She was pulled out. Otherwise her husband would have been charged with killing her.

Nothing Learned.

Prosecutor King took advantage of this opening and with his detectives hurried to the parsonage. Later he took father and sons to his office. Nothing was obtained from any of them.

In his address Monday Sheatsley said, after thanking the Bexley people for their flowers, confidence and sympathy:

"It is to be desired that an educational institution be known the world around for her academic achievements, rather than through some calamitous circumstance coming to one of her representatives.

"While we are sorry that the name of our Alma Mater has been borne along on the surging waves of a sensational press, and from tongue to tongue, in wildest and irresponsible gossipings, nevertheless, the Christian spirit which she has shown and in which we have lived, has sustained us in the hour of trial and has saved us from being crushed by foul suspicion.

"Found Blameless."

"If our family, by the grace of God had not been living as becomes Christians, we could never have cleared our skirts of the suspicion of the foulest of crimes. But, thank God, we have been found blameless and the spirit of this institution has helped us so to live.

"There is another lesson that these days of distress have brought home to us, and that is a proper valuation and due respect for the powers that be. It has been of inestimable value to us that the civil authorities, having the tragic case in hand, are men who have made every possible effort to discharge the duties of their offices to the best of their knowledge and ability. They have worked untiringly that culprits, if any, might be brought to justice, and that the innocent might be protected, and their good name preserved. The excited populace was astir. Suspicion was aroused, the voice of the slanderer was heard.

"It required public servants of cool head and steady nerves and with a high resolve to do their sworn duty to ferret out the truth.

"Do we fully appreciate good government? I fear that only too often we are not concerned about the kind of men who are to fill our public offices. In a republican form of government like our own we must have an interest in our public offices and in those who fill these positions of trust.

"Young men and women, take a lively interest in the affairs of government for the powers that be are ordained of God, and a Christian cannot successfully sidestep his duty in this matter. Disaster will be the inevitable result."

NEWS OF WARSAW

Services in the Churches — Personal Mention.

WARSAW, Dec. 3.—Mr. A. F. Choate returned on Saturday. He had spent over a week in Toronto. He was delighted with what he saw of the Royal Winter Fair.

Mrs. Charles Foster spent a week in Reaboro. She went up to attend the official opening of the new Reaboro school.

Joseph Miles is home again and is feeling much better.

Miss Jennie Graham and Mrs. Thurston are visiting Mrs. Robert Payne.

Mrs. John Tucker is recovering from her recent severe illness.

Miss Burry spent the week-end with her sister at the parsonage.

There was service in the Baptist church on Sunday morning.

Rev. Walter Cox conducted the Anglican service Sunday afternoon. They are preparing an entertainment for the children.

Rev. J. Knox, a former pastor, preached at three appointments on the Warsaw circuit on Sunday. It was the Sunday for the annual missionary subscriptions. The circuit is asked for $560 this year. Mr. Knox's evening text was, "He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from river until the ends of the earth." The choir had special music and Mr. Batten sang "Crossing the Bar", a favorite of Mr. Knox.

At the close of the Presbyterian service on Sunday morning, the beautiful, solemn communion service of that church was observed. Rev. W. Atkinson officiated.

As usual the collection was a missionary one, and a special missionary collection will be taken up next Sunday also.

The Presbyterian Ladies' Aid and missionary society met in the church on Thursday afternoon. Mr. Charles Tighe read a paper on the life of Mary Llessor, the "white ma". The next meeting will be the annual election of officers and will be held at Mrs. John Tucker's, where Thursday's meeting was to have been, but for her illness.

The Presbyterian Sunday School are preparing for their annual entertainment on New Years' night.

Many cattle were brought from the ranches last week. Sundays' storm brought the rest back early this week.

Rain is very much needed. The little that came last week barely moistened the land, made no perceptible difference on the river or on springs, and put very little in cisterns. It will be a hard look-out for watering cattle if no more comes.

Mr. Foster will draw milk to Peterboro this week.

The last threshing near Warsaw was finished yesterday. A farmer had the best crop of grain he ever handled a fairly good crop of sweet clover and quite a bit of flax.

Another farmer grew some flax but was not able to get it harvested, on account of the rain.

GALSWORTHY LIMERICK.

LONDON, Dec. 3.—(United Press).—John Galsworthy, novelist and playwright, has written a limerick. Here it is:

"An angry young husband called Bicket
Said: "Turn yourself 'round and I'll kick it.

In the nude to the life.
Do you think, Mr. Greene, it was cricket?"

This, it is said, is the first limerick of which Galsworthy has been guilty. It appears in a new book recently published by an English firm.

THE CLEAN HEART

THE HOSPITAL MERGER RESTS WITH BOARDS

Meeting Last Night to Discuss Taking Over of Isolation Hospital.

DOCTORS OPPOSED.

Plan Proposed By Mayor J. J. Turner in the Interests of Economy.

A special meeting of the Board of Health was convened last evening to consider with representatives of the Nicholls and St. Joseph's Hospital, the proposal made some time ago by Mayor Turner that the two hospitals in the interests of economy, take over jointly the manning nd supervision of the Queen Mary Isolation Hospital. The meeting was simply one of discussion, with a final decision left to the hospitals, to be settled at a future meeting of the Board.

The Board also passed a resolution, fathered by Mayor Turner and seconded by James Lynch, to pay the Kaustine Company of Dundas, the firm responsible for the recent installation at the Isolation Hospital of a new septic tank and syphon chamber, the sum of $600 on account of a total of $785, when the company has given a guarantee that the tank will prove adequate for the needs of the persons first discussed, viz., 35.

There was a little interchange of opinion between His Worship, the Mayor, and Dr. T. W. H. Young, the Medical Health Offic of the city, as to the workableness of the Mayor's plan in connection wtih the Isolation Hospital.

Dr. Young characterized it as "silly," and the Mayor strongly defended his own position in the matter, explaining that the suggested change implied no fault-finding with the present management of the hospital, but was simply in the interests of econmy.

The Mayor's Plan."

Mayor Turner's plan, as outlined at the request of the chairman, G. H. Duncan, was to have Nicholls and St. Joseph's Hospitals take turns in manning and supervising the Queen Mary Isolation Hospital. The only permanent employees of the latter institution would then be the caretaker and his wife. If there were no cases of contagious disease to be treated, there would be no other staff at the hospital. When there were such cases, nurses from the two other city hospitals could be placed in turn at the Isolation hospital, with a head nurse in charge, and as many assistants as were necessary to properly attend to the patients. The Mayor referred to the annual appropriation of $10,000 a year for the Isolation Hospital, and said that the cost for the 32 or 35 patients treated there last year amounted to about $300 each. He thought that, under the new plan, the budget might be decreased by about $5,000.

A second point emphasized by Mr. Turner was the experience afforded pupil nurses in the two other hospitals in a type of contagious disease training that they lacked at present.

Dr. J. M. McCulloch and W. A. Richardson represented the Nicholls Hospital Board at last night's meeting and Rev. P. Costello, the Board of St. Joseph's Hospital.

Asked for an expression of opinion, Dr. McCulloch said that they were present merely to glean information as to the details of the plan, and take back a report to the Nicholls Hospital Board.

Rev. Father Costello said that the matter had been discussed at a meeting of the medical staff of St. Joseph's Hospital, the majority of the doctors expressing themselves as opposed to the plan. The Isolation hospital was doing the work of isolating these diseases from the community at large, and matters were better left in their present condition.

Mr. Duncan remarked that the Health Act distinctly states that the Isolation Hospital must be under the management of the Board of Health, and Mr. Turner replied that no change would be made in this regard, the difference being the doing away with present staff which for long periods of time has nothing to do, and allowing the other two hospitals to man and supervise the institution when the need arose. In answer to objections as to the danger of inoculating patients in the other two hospitals with infectious disease when the nurses returned from periods of work at the Isolation building, His Worship referred to the system of disinfection of clothing and body carried on by all nurses and physicians.

Dr. Young said that a nurse might unknowingly carry disease from this hospital and inoculate a debilitated patient in either of the other two hospitals, and that people would not send their children to hospitals were inexperienced nurses were in charge.

James Lynch, while agreeing with the Mayor's idea of cutting down expense wherever possible, could not see the feasibility of the plan.

C. H. Rogers engaged in a brief tilt with Dr. Young, recording his support of the Mayor's idea, and citing other hospital institutions as examples of the working out of plans whereby nurses in training were given certain experience in contagious disease.

Burden on Other Hospitals.

Dr. McCulloch, speaking from a personal viewpoint, thought that the plan promised a system whereby nurses in either of the two other hospitals would necessarily be set aside for certain periods, when they would be available for work with contagious diseases, and in this way, while perhaps perforce idle, would be losing a certain portion of their training in other disease conditions. "It would be up to us to keep our staff over manned in order that we might be on call for you, and then when these extra nurses were sent back to us, we would have no work for them."

Mr. Richardson enquired the amount that would be saved by adopting the plan, and was told that it was equivalent to the salaries of the staff and their maintenance in board and lodging at the institution. The salaries alone amount yearly to $3180 at the present time.

Dr. Young was not in favor of the system which calculated each patient as a cost to the city of $300 annually, remarking that the city was just that much cleaner for each patient treated at the institution.

Nurses Not Trained Fully

Mayor Turner here raised another point, when he declared that the discharge of a nurse in training from the Isolation Hospital at the end of a three year period of training as a full-fledged nurse, with the same diploma as that accorded in anylother institution, was not fair to the public, such a nurse having received a very small share of the training which any person engaging a trained nurse expects her to have. "You turn her out on the public as a full-fledged nurse, which she is not."

Dr. Young replied that the pupil nurses at the isolation hospital get a certain amount of training at the other two institutions in the regular curriculum of a nurse.

Mr. Duncan summed up the situation as a laudable desire on the part of the Mayor to effect economy in public expenditures wherever possible, and asked the representatives of the Nicholls and St. Joseph's hospitals to report on the discussion to their respective boards.

New Septic Tank.

The Board of Health then considered the matter of the account of the Kaustine Company of Dundas, the firm which had the contract for the installation of the new septic tank and syphon chamber at the Queen Mary Hospital. The question has been raised that the new tank, with its six hundred feet of field tile, is not adequate for the needs of the number of persons discussed at the inception of the plan, viz., 35. A letter received by A. G. Metheral, Plumbing Inspector, from the Department of Public Health in Toronto, gave the requisite length of four inch tile required for such a number as in the neighborhood of 2100 feet, if the syphon chamber is discharged once in every 24 hours. With a secondary discharge the amount of tile required would be reduced by half that amount. The total amount of the contract is $785, but all the work has not yet been completed, a grease tank yet remaining un-installed.

After considerable discussion it was finally decided to pay the company $600 on account, on condition that they give a guarantee that the system installed will prove adequate for the needs of the number of persons discussed at the time of letting the contract, 35. The filling in of the old cesspool was recommended by C. S. Stapleton.

There were present at last night's meeting, G. H. Duncan, chairman, Mayor Turner, City Clerk Armstrong Dr. T. W. H. Young, M.O.H., Messrs. C. H. Rogers and James Lynch, Sanitary Inspector C. S. Stapleton and Plumbing Inspector A. G. Metheral.

BELIEVED TO BE A CHINESE GIRL

Eveleyn Kendall Moy Is Said By Foster Parents to be Daughter of Toronto Woman.

BILLINGS, Mont., Dec. 3.—(Canadian Press).—Born of white parents, but reared in China, with a Chinese doctor and Caucasian woman, man and wife, for her foster parents, Eveleyn Kendall Moy, until yesterday believed to be of Mongolian blood, was revealed in what may be a death-affidavit, made yesterday by her foster mother, to be a Canadian girl—daughter of a woman who is now the wife of a wealthy Toronto business man. The name of the girl's mother was not revealed.

Apprehensive of the future of her daughter by adoption, who yesterday was prevented from marrying H. F. Hinkley, of Miles City, Mont., when the minister refused to perform the ceremony, because of a State law prohibiting the marriage of Chinese and whites, Mrs. Sara H. E. Moy, wife of the Oriental physician, today declared under an oath that the girl was born in Toronto of Caucasian parents; that shortly after birth she was adopted by the Moy's and taken to China, returning with them to the States in 1913. It is believed the affidavit will remove the obstacle to marriage.

CROWD BESIEGES EXECUTIONER IN LINDSAY TO-DAY

Hangman Ellis Fled to His Room in Benson Hotel For Refuge.

TENSE FEELING.

Citizens Leave Town to Escape Proximity to Execution of McGaughey.

LINDSAY, December 3.—(Special to the Examiner).—When hangman Ellis arrived in Lindsay last night and registered at the Benson Hotel he was besieged by such a crowd, eager to see him, that he seized his coat and fled to his room for refuge. Crowds are gathered around the hotel to-day seeking a view of the man who, it is expected, will on Friday morning launch William Frederick McGaughey's soul into eternity in conformity with the judgment passed upon him for the wilful murder of Beatrice Lillian Fee in May last.

A tense feeling manifests itself in the town as the day of the execution draws near, citizens expressing the greatest sympathy for the relatives of the condemned man but none at all for the man who slayed his sweetheart.

Residents in the vicinity of the jail have closed their homes and gone to Toronto for the week-end, being unable to bear the strains of being in close proximity to the condemned man before and during the execution.

As for McGaughey himself, he shows little change from the manner he bore during his trial, and does not display much fervor in spiritual matters. As a Presbyterian, he has been given every comfort and encouragement to repentance by clergymen of that denomination. He admits he is sorry for the deed, but maintains still that a voice told him to kill Beatrice Fee.

People are worked up to a high pitch and feeling against the man under sentence of death is very pronounced. Leslie Frost, his counsel, has worked indefatigably for his reprieve, and until last night was hopeful that carrying out of the sentence might be averted.

With the silence of the Cabinet as to its decision, the building of the scaffold, and the presence of the hangman, it now appears that the supreme penalty will be paid, and atonement made with his life for the life he took.

BRITAIN WATCHING U.S.-FRENCH MOVES

French Seek More Favorable Terms Than Those Enjoyed By England.

(By Lloyd Allen—United Press Staff Correspondent).

LONDON, Dec. 3.—Great Britain is keeping a watchful eye — not to stay a jealous eye—upon the debt funding negotiations between France and the United States, with particular attention to reports that the French seek more favorable terms than those enjoyed by this country.

If such a concession were granted by the United States to France, it would be resented by everyone here, from the Government bench to the pubs of Hackneywick, as a personal affront.

The Baldwin Government would be forced automatically to protest that Britain, as a friendly nation, was being discriminated against. Such a concession on the part of the United States would be a serious blow to Premier Baldwin personally and would in all probability force the immediate revision of the present policy regarding France's debt to England.

THEATRES

AT THE ROYAL.

HUTCHISON STORY IS MADE INTO PICTURES.

"The Clean Heart" or "The Cruelties of Life" Soon To Be Shown Here.

"The Clean Heart" or "The Cruelties of Life," which will be shown at the Royal Theatre on Monday, is an adaptation from the A. S. M. Hutchinson novel. The cast includes Percy Marmont, Marguerite de la Motte, Otis Harlan, Violet La Plante George Ingleton, Martha Petelle, Louis Morrison, Hughie Mack, Anne Lockhart, Andrew Arbuckle and William Moran.

The picture is one of the most unusual ever used for a screen production, a fact readily appreciated in considering that the novel was first published in 1914 several years previous to Hutchison writing "If Winter Comes" and "This Freedom," both of which have been made into internationally famous motion pictures the unusual theme of "The Clean Heart," or "The Cruelties of Life," and the incidental difficulty in properly filming it has been responsible for the delay in making it into a screen production.

"HOLD YOUR BREATH" LAST TIME TO-NIGHT.

The Al Christie feature, "Hold Your Breath," will be shown at the Royal Theatre for the last time tonight. This rapid-fire comedy drama of a girl reporter is interpreted by one of the greatest comedy casts ever assembled.

It includes Dorothy Devore, Walter Hiers, Tully Marshall, Jimmie Adams, Priscilla Bonner, Jimmie Harrison, Lincoln Plumer, Rosa Gore, Jay Belasco, George Pierce, Victor Rodman, Budd Fine, Eddie Baker and Douglas Carter. Frank Roland Conklin wrote the story and Scott Sidney directed. It is without a doubt the best comedy of its kind we have had the pleasure of witnessing.

HOOT GIBSON COMING TOMORROW IN NEW PLAY.

Hoot Gibson, long since firmly established as one of the real comedians of screenland, has come now to convince that dangerously skidding automobiles or wickedly plunging bronchos are not necessary to enable him to entertain, nor situations of impending peril from others to enable him to convulse his spectators with laughter that comes from the natural subtitles of the finished comedian.

In "40 Horse Hawkins," Universal-Gibson production, to be shown at the Royal Theatre tomorrow, Hoot is not placed in a single situation of danger, yet the story is such as to allow intense interest at every turn. Hoot does all sorts of things which ordinarily might seem unexciting tasks, like Being the hotel porter, bus driver, cook and waiter, stage-manager and property man in a little theatre.

Hoot is the chief toto of everything about the village, especially the local theatre. As the jack-of-all trades, he cases the way of a barn-storming crew which come to thrill with melodrama.

"40 Horse Hawkins" was written by Edward Sedgwick in collaboration with Raymond L. Schrock, and was directed by Sedgwick, who also interpreted one of the parts. Others prominently cast as actors of the speaking stage are Ann Cornwall, Helen Holmes and Richard Tucker.

Deserting his busy life in the village Hoot goes to New York seeking the little ingenue who appeared in the theatre where he was employed. He obtains a "supe" job in a Broadway Civil War drama where, although the does not know it, the girl is being starred

AT THE GRAND.

"THE THIEF OF BAGDAD."

This evening affords the last opportunity for theatre-goers to see the mammoth picture, "The Thief of Bagdad," at the Grand Opera House. Those who miss this production will have failed to see something really notable in the moving-picture line. In photograhy, atmosphere, backgrounds and characterizations, nothing more outstanding has been in this city for years. "The Thief of Bagdad" creates a new field in motion picturedom. It holds effects that have never yet been thought of, and is absolutely beyond comparison with anything yet attempted in the silver screen line.

In quest of his Princess, the tattered, athletic thief goes to perilous adventure. Up the magic rope that rises aloft in the air he makes his way through the dangers of the Caliph's palace, he fights and conquers a monstrous dragon, takes his magic talisman to the cavern of enchanted trees and threads the valley of fire.

All the wonders of Acmed Abdullah's story are reproduced on the screen for "The Thief of Bagdad." Here is the dread Goddess Doorga, the Destroyer, with her marvellous eye, here is the magic flying carpet and winged horse, here is the golden apple of death and life, and the shining cloak of invisibility with its power of shielding the wearer from human sight. Everything that the child delights in, in the old fairy tale books, has a living, moving place on the screen, wound about the love story of the incomparable Ahmed and his lovely Princess.

The orchestra is one of the delightful adjuncts that round out a completely artistic production. Its harmony is a perfect complement to the various scenes, and is played beautifully by the twelve skilled musicians who form the group. There is one repeated refrain that seems to be admirably suited to the daring, fantastic treatment of the Arabian Nights' tale.

AT THE CAPITOL.

IN-LAWS GET HUBBY INTO "HOT WATER".

Harold Lloyd's Newest Is Five Reel Domestic Comedy.

Hubby! He was just an everyday young fellow, who loved his wife and his home, and everything. But one day his mother-in-law, and his two brothers-in-law walked in on him, and then the trouble began.

Briefly, this is the theme of Harold Lloyd's newest fun creator, "Hot Water," which he finished after five months of intensive work at the Hollywood studios, and which will represent his second offering as an independent producer. It is the attraction tomorrow, Friday and Saturday at the Capitol theatre.

It is a theme which offers all kinds of possibilities for mirth, because it is human, and Lloyd, ably assisted by one of the best casts ever seen in his support, has taken advantage of every possibility for laughs. "Hot Water" is a wholesome comedy of the type for which Lloyd has become famed, and the picture is certain to be ranked high with the best of the Fall productions. Sam Taylor and Fred Newmeyer directed "Hot Water" from a story by Taylor, Tim Whelan, John Grey and Thomas J. Gray.

TURKS OPPOSED TO EGYPTIAN PROTESTS

King Said to Have Killed 2,000 Indians Because One Smiled at English Woman.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 3. — (Canadian Press).—The Grand National Assembly approved the decision of the Cabinet to take no notice of the Egyptian protests against Britain. Aghaoglou Ahmed Bey, who has been consistently hostile to Britain, made a speech, in the course of which he said that the King of England had killed 2,000 Indians because one of them had smiled at an English woman and that the King had made the same Indians walk upon their hands for a whole week.

Fethi Bey, Premier, declared that the Government disapproved of the expressions used about the British Government, with which it desired to maintain good relations. Although the Turkish people were anxious that the Egyptian nation should gain independence and property, he declared they were also desirous of developing the existing good relations with Britain in accordance with the interests of Turkey.

"THE CHILD AT HOME."

Put Children to Bed Early and Watch Their Diet, Says Speaker.

An open meeting of the King George Home and School Association was held last evening in the kindergarten room of the school, with an attendance of nearly one hundred people. Mrs E. Scott, the vice-president, took the chair.

The feature of the programme was an address by Rev. Jas W. Gordon, on The Child at Home, and what should he be." Mr. Gordon pointed out how parents could help the teachers in co-operating with their work at home, by sending the children to bed early, watching their diet and seeing that they had quiet study periods, encouraging them in their work and inculcating respect for the teacher in the student. Don't make things too easy for the child," was another of his admonitions.

The musical programme that made a pleasant interlude in the evening's entertainment consisted of readings by Mr. J. John, Master Edward Wright, Master George Milliken, a pianoforte solo by Phyllis Payne, a violin solo by Master George Record, a vocal duett by Mrs H. F Doig and Mrs. E. $150,000 BAIL FOR DIRECTORS

C. H. Barnard Out on $100,000—Smith on $50,000 —Couldn't Refuse Bail.

BARNARD IS ILL.

TORONTO, Dec. 3. — (Canadian Press).—C. A. Barnard, of Montreal, under sentence of eighteen months' imprisonment, and Lieut.-Col. C. F. Smith, of Montreal, under sentence of six months, in connection with charges arising out of the collapse of the Home Bank, of which they were directors, were this afternoon admitted to bail in $100,000 for Barnard and $50,000 for Smith, pending appeal and hearing of their cases before the Ontario Supreme Court. This order was made by Chief Justice Mulock of the Appellate Division of the Court.

The Chief Justice, in giving his decision, read his reasons after a review of the cases in question. He declared that it was not possible to lay down the inflexible rule about giving bail after conviction, pending appeal. All persons, he said, must be presumed innocent until they were proved guilty. If convictions were set aside by appeal it made persons innocent, and it would not be right to have them in jail in the meantime. He also declared that one case could not constitute a precedent for others. He said that the nature of offence, character of men, their connections, etc., must go a long way in a decision. Appeals in this case were not frivolous but substantial, and the men concerned were worthy, respectable citizens, engaged in legitimate callings in Montreal.

Mr. Barnard put in an affidavit, stating that he had been ill with diabetes for 18 months, and that there would be grave consequences unless he continued the strict diet upon which he had been living. D. L. McCarthy, for the Crown, would not consent to bail, but did not object.

President Coolidge Makes Annual Speech To Congress.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—(Canadian Press).—President Coolidge, in his annual message to Congress today, advised the United States adherence to the World Court of International Justice, declared the United States was not disposed to join the League of Nations, and repeated his declaration that United States was opposed to any cancellation of debts owed the United States by foreign governments.

In the realm of domestic affairs the President advised that the most important work the Congress could do would be to sponsor a system of rigid economy to make possible a further reduction of taxes for the next fiscal year.

CHARGED WITH KILLING OF 8

After Murdering Seven, Including His Wife, He Set Fire to House—One Burned Alive.

STABBED HIMSELF.

BERLIN, Dec. 3.—(By Carl D. Groat United Press Staff Correspondent).—A gruesome wholesale murder near Siege in West Phalia in which eight persons were hacked or burned to death was revealed by police investigation today to have been the work of one man.

A quarry manager named Angerstein whose wife, mother, sisters, and servants were the victims is accused of the crime.

Angerstein was found in the garden near his burning villa in which the bodies of the murdered persons were incinerated. He was suffering from stab wounds and told a story of return home to find a gang of bandits slaughtering the members of his household.

Mrs Angerstein and her mother-in-law and sister-in-law had been hacked to pieces with hatchets and knives, four servants being similarly disposed and a maid servant who had hidden in an upstairs room had been burned alive. The police searched the lonely stretch of woods near the villa and stopped all traffic in the vicinity to prevent escape of the supposed bandits. Investigation of the ruins disclosed finger prints another evidence showing that Angerstein had committed the eight murders after which he had stabbed himself.

When neighbours attracted by the flames, bursting from the villa found the quarry manager in his garden he pleaded with them to save my poor wife from the bandits, and told a story of an attack by a band of twenty-five outlaws. Angerstein is in a hospital and is expected to recover. Embezzlements discovered through examination of the quarry accounts are believed to have led to the crime.

Despite the terrible slaughter in the villa, money and jewels had been left untouched. Angerstein's young daughter is missing.

CHICAGO POLICE ROUND UP EIGHT

They Are Responsible For More Than 100 Robberies Since July.

CHICAGO, Dec. 3. — (Canadian Press).—Eight youths of from 16 to 27 years of age, were arrested last night in connection with a recent series of attacks on women. Partial confessions were obtained the police said.

In each case the woman was kidnapped after her escorts had been slugged.

One of the victims Mrs. Frances Palermo married by her fiance a day after the attack died three weeks later.

The band was responsible for more than 100 robberies since July. Joseph Savage, assistant prosecutor, said he attributed to their actions fatal shootings yesterday of Policeman Perren, member of Detective Bureau squad, fired upon by Hugh Stewart bank cashier, when the officer sought to question him. Stewart testified he mistook the automobile load of officers for a band of attackers and shot when he was halted.

SOLOISTS IN COURT.

Travelled on Road as Famous "Sistine Chapel Choir."

MONTREAL, Dec. 3.—(Canadian Press.)—Eight Italians, comprising a group of "Roman Singers," who appeared in concert here a few weeks ago and who were advertised as the "soloists" of famous Sistine Chapel Choir of Rome, yesterday told Chief Justice Decarie, in whose court they are testifying, in connection with charges against New York impressario named Emet Moore or Emmet Finnegan, that if they were not allowed to leave Montreal soon they would starve. Their money was almost entirely gone, for they had not received any engagements since the inception of the present law suit against their manager, who is charged by Hector Dutrisac, local impressario, with having obtained $4,500 from the general public under false pretences and three thousand from himself.

The New York manager is committed for trial on both charges. Meanwhile the singers, who at their concerts were favorably received by the public and critics, are appearing in court as witnesses, some claiming to be genuinely connected with Sistine Chapel Choir and others admitting they had never sung in that body.

CAMPBELL FLOUR MILLS POWER SUBJECT OF JUDICIAL INQUIRY SUGGESTS COUNCIL COMMITTEE

NAME DISCREPANCIES

Report from Hydro-Electric Power Commission Does Not Satisfy.

Declaring that in its opinion the investigations made by the Peterborough Utilities Commission and Hydro Electric Commission of Ontario into the power account of Campbell Flour Mills Ltd. had not cleared up the mystery satisfactorily, the City Council in committee of the whole last night recommended a judical inquiry. This, it is proposed, will take place before His Honor Judge Huycke, when evidence may be taken under oath.

Several months ago the Council was made acquainted by Alderman J. W. Myers, chairman of the Manufacturers Committee, with facts which convinced it that an investigation of the power accounts of the Campbell Mills should be made. The Utilities Commission, under the chairmanship of Robert Hicks, conducted this inquiry, at which witnesses maintained that the commission cannot go with out the bounds of its government-tested and government-approved meters in making power charges.

It was alleged by the City Council on information in its possession that power aggregating $15,000 had been used by Campbell Flour Mills without payment. This was borne out by statements of milling experts throughout Canada and United States that the 750 barrel mill could not operate under 250 horsepower, whereas on many months 75 horse power only was charged. In the thirty-three months period from March 1919 to December 1921, it is believed by the Council, the average was less than 75 horsepower, maximum demand.

Appeal to Hydro.

On the Utilities Commission, composed of Robert Hicks, E. F. Mason, and W. H. Bradburn deciding that its accounts were correct and its house in order, the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario was appealed to. The report from Hydro was presented at last night's meeting.

While in the main supporting the Utilities Commission in its claim that the meters must govern the charges for electrical power, Hydro states in the report that one third horse power per barrel is the ordinary milling practice in power installation, the same contention that the City Council made in opening the question. On this basis, it was pointed out last night, the 750 barrel mill would require 250 horse power merely to turn over the machinery.

Taking the figure set by the Hydro-Electric Commission in its report as a basis, the City Council will if the resolution passed last night is ratified, prosecute the issue to a decision.

A special meeting has been called for Monday night to adopt the resolution.

Text of the Resolution.

It was moved by Alderman Maher, seconded by Alderman Crowe, and resolved: That whereas the report of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, dated the 17th day of October 1924, relating to the amount of electrical power charged to the Campbell Flour Mills Co., Ltd. with reference to its mill in this city shows that one-third horse power per barrel is the ordinary milling practice in power installation and that the said mill proper apart from the feed mill required from 250 horse power to 270 horse power to turn it over with the full feed on;

And whereas the books of the Peterborough Utilities Commission show that from March 1919 until Dec. 1921, the Campbell Flour Mills Company Limited with reference to the said Mill was charged for the electrical power used by it in its operation not more than on an average less than 75 horse power maximum demand;

And whereas the members of this council feel that the report of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario does not sufficiently elucidate the mystery and are desirous of having an investigation undner oath;

Be therefore resolved that under the provisions of section 248 of the Municipal Act, His Honor E. C. S. Huycke, esquire, Judge of the coun-

SIR HARI SINGH MAY BE CALLED

Identity of "Mr. A." Finally Confirmed by India Office.

AIDE'S DEFENSE

PARIS, Dec. 4. — (Canadian Press).—The mysterious Mr. A. who was connected with the recent Robinson blackmailing case will be called as a witness in the British courts should James Charles Arthur, former British army officer, who was the aide-de-camp to "Mr. A.," and who is under arrest in Paris, be successful in his attempt to prevent extradition to London.

The mystery concerning "Mr. A." was lifted by the India Office in London yesterday when it was announced that he is "Rajah Sir Hari Singh, a nephew of the Maharaja of Jammu and Kashmir." Previously the potentate's name had been held secret for "reasons of state."

Counsel for Arthur announced last night that the essentials for the defence were the identification of the potentate and proof through the Rajah's testimony that the aide-de-camp acted fully in accord with him in the settlement of the blackmail. Arthur, the attorney said, also was responsible for the expulsion from Nice of Mrs. C. E. Robinson, the wife of a former bookmaker, in whose room the Rajah was found by the blackmailers, when she went to Nice allegedly to renew her relations with the Rajah.

The British Government has not yet presented its extradition warrant with the full legal information required by French law concerning the time, the place and the circumstances surrounding the crime alleged to have been committed by Arthur.

Divorce For Robinson?

Arthur said: "It is all a political plot, but you will see that they will never dare to let me testify. The whole British dominion over India at stake."

Friends of Robinson here say that his first action, now that Judge Darling has decided against him in his suit to recover $625,000 of the blackmail money from the Midland Bank, will be to file a divorce petition, naming the Indian Prince.

THE WEATHER.

To-day is the first Thursday in December (gauge day for the winter months) that is, the weather for the next three months will take on the general characteristics of that prevailing to-day, especially as regards the direction of the wind. Watch and see. Last Saturday evening while in a store on George street, I was asked what were the prospects for Sunday. I replied that it looked like some snow. "Impossible — the moon is too far south." Nevertheless the "impossible" happened, and heavy snow fell the following evening. So there are exceptions to all rules—whether they are earthly or lunar—but it is really remarkable the trust that is reposed in "fair Luna" as a weather forecaster. About ninety-nine per cent. of those living in the country believe implicitly in the moon, while it is probable a majority of the city dwellers would give that luminary a vote of confidence.—W.P.

Examination Papers Not Stolen By Any Collegiate Pupil Now Resident Here

"There is no evidence that any pupil of the Collegiate Institute now resident in Peterborough was guilty of the theft of examination papers."

In an effort to clear up the rumors current in the city regarding the theft of examination papers from the Collegiate Institute on the eve of the midsummer examinations, The Examiner asked Premier G. Howard Ferguson, Minister of Education, for a report in accordance with his promise in July. The above is his reply. The Premier adds that he has not yet received a final report from Detective Hammond.

KORTEZ NEARING END OF CHAPTER

Chicago Swindler Will Probably Be Sentenced Before Week is Out.

CHICAGO, Dec. 4.—(Canadian Press).—The end of the story of Leo Koretz, promoter for 18 years of a Panama oil scheme in which $2,000,000 was invested by friends and relatives, will come before Saturday which will find him serving a penitentiary sentence, according to Robert E. Crowe, state's attorney.

The prosecutor planned to have Koretz carry out yesterday afternoon his intention to plead guilty to indictments charging larceny, larency by Bailee, operation of a confidence game and a general charge on all counts. Hearing of Attorneys' pleas today and probable sentence Friday was the remainder of the program. Each charge, upon conviction would carry a penalty of from one to ten years imprisonment.

Koretz has finished the ale of his ventures which began when as a duped investor, he applied methods by which he had been victimized to the time he fled to Halifix, N.S., from where he was brought back this week. In bankruptcy court Tuesday he submitted to hours of questioning by attorneys for receivers of his estate. Not quite one-third of the claims of his creditors can be paid by the total assets discovered to date, it was shown by a statement filed yesterday. A deficit of $1,228,598 was listed between liabilities of $1,763,548.34 and assets of $535,849.55.

APPRECIATES WORK DUSTLESS SWEEPER

Mayor Turner Expresses Thanks of City for Manner of Carrying Out Contract.

At the Council meeting Monday evening the Mayor took occassion to express appreciation to the Dominion Dustless Sweeper Company for the splendid manner in which the contract with the City had been carried out.

The machine purchased by the City thoroughly demonstrated its efficiency and the Mayor further testified as to the condition of the streets ready for business each day.

Being an early riser he had an opportunity of inspecting the work done during the early morning hours and each street had a polish and sheen, with absence of dust everywhere.

This service of the Dustless Sweeper was helped by the merchants sweeping the litter in front of their premises out past the gutter allowing the machine to gather it up with other roadway materials.

Further the Mayor asked the privilege of testifying to the efficiency of the Dustless Sweeping machine—the satisfactory demonstrative trials and the pleasant way all suggestions from the Board of Aldermen was met by the Company officials.

The Mayor concluded by wishing the Company every success.

MRS. SHEATSLEY SLAIN AND BODY PUT IN FURNACE

Experts Report Evidence Conclusive That Woman Was Not a Suicide.

FURTHER TESTS.

Coroner and Husband Not Satisfied—Could a Woman Climb In?

COLUMBUS, Ohio., Dec. 3.—Convinced beyond a shadow of a doubt that Mrs. Addie Sheatsley, wife of the pastor of the Christ Lutheran Church, Bexley, was dead before her body was placed in the furnace of the Lutheran parsonage on the afternoon of November 17, Dr. H. M. Brundage, pathologist, and Charles F. Long, chemist, made a final report on the scientific experiments upon which their conclusions are based to Prosecutor King Tuesday afternoon.

Sitting in the conference when the report was given were the Rev. C. V. Sheatsley, husband of the furnace victim, and Professor Grover Orr, of Capital University a friend of the Sheatsley family.

Wants More Tests

Both Long and Brundage reviewed the findings of their original analysis of the vital organs of Mrs. Sheatsley, which showed the absence of carbon monoxide gas. Then, turning to the experiments conducted at the Sheatsley home one week after the incinerated body of Mrs. Sheatsley was found, almost to the hour, they reported that these tests only bore out more conclusively their original belief that Mrs. Sheatsley was killed before her body was put in the fire box.

It may be that further experiments will have to be conducted in order to satisfy Coroner Murphy and Mr. Sheatsley, both of whom have stubbornly insisted that Mrs. Sheatsley took her own life by crawling into furnace.

Coroner Murphy wants a test made with dead guinea pigs—to have the m subjected to the flames under the same conditions that live pigs were immolated last Monday. He even suggested the strangulation of one guineau pig in order to note the reaction on its lungs after it was was placed in the furnace.

Gas in Pig's Lungs

Sheatsley would like to have a woman, as near as possible the same as his late wife, crawl into the furnace without having been instructed as to the manner of procedure, in order that he might determine if the average woman would go in head first, or feet first.

Chemist Long was the first to report, to the effect that gas from the furnace when the guinea pigs were incinerated was heavy with carbon-monoxide, as was the blood of the pigs after they had been sacrificed to science.

Dr. Brundage supplemented Long's report with his analysis of the guinea pigs' lungs and blood, and declared that his examination showed the pigs had breathed carbon-monoxide in great quantities and that otherwise their lungs showed evidence of having been alive in the furnace for a short time, which evidence was lacking in the lungs and the blood of Mrs. Sheatsley. He said

"I am convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that Mrs. Sheatsley was dead when her body was placed in the furnace."

When Coroner Murphy and the Rev. Mr. Sheatsley sought to oppose his contention by citing methods by which the woman might have crawled into the furnace, the scientist was adamant. He said:

"Insane people do many queer things. It may be within the realm of possibility for Mrs. Sheatsley to have crawled into the furnace alive, but she would have breathed perhaps three or four times after her head entered the gas-filled fire box, and but one inhalation would have been suficient to register the carbon monoxide gas upon the blood in her lungs."

Coroner Murphy asked if a test had been made for carbon dioxide gas, which he declared, would have been present if Mrs. Sheatsley had been strangled to death. This test was not made. Brundage and Long reported.

The Rev. Mr. Sheatsley declared his belief that his wife took her own life. He said.

"There is not one person in 10,000 who would place a woman's body in the position which Mrs. Sheatsley's body was found."

To Prosecutor King, Mr. Brundage stated that the heat to which the body was subjected would have some effect on its position.

Rattling Sabres We Don't Possess Must Cease, Says German Defense Minister

LEIPSIC, Germany, Dec. 4. (Canadian Press).—"I emphatically reject the mere suggestion of war revenge, and not one German child would I wish to see sacrificed to such a thought", Dr. Otto Gessler, German minister of defense declared in the course of a rousing campaign speech for the Democratic party here yesterday.

Dr. Gessler demanded allegiance to the "Black, Red and Gold" flag which he designated as the colors of the constitution. He said he believed it was Germany's good fortune to have as her president such a distinguished and well-balanced, patriotic man as President Ebert.

"This ridiculous rattling of sabres which we don't possess must cease," the speaker continued. "We must confine ourselves to business and politics which will be devoted to the negotiations of commercial treaties, the formulating of taxation programmes and other urgent economic legislation."

CHAPLIN'S WIFE SWEET SIXTEEN

California Requires Compulsory Education Until 18th Birthday.

COMEDIAN IS 35

LOS ANGELES, Cal., December 4.—A photographic copy of the 16-year-old birth certificate of Lillian Louisa McMurray, who several years ago became Lita Grey of the movies, and who a few days ago became Mrs. Charles Chaplin of Beverly Hills, was tossed upon the Chaplin flame early on Tuesday, about the time the morning milk was delivered.

It beamed from a prominent page of the Los Angeles Times where fate and the activities of inquisitive reporters had conspired to place it for comparison with the Mexican marriage records, which last week depicted Miss Grey as a 19-year-old bride and gave Chaplin's age as 35."

According to the certificate published by the Times, Miss Grey was born near Hollywood A; . 15, 1908. She later attended two schools in Los Angeles, records of which reveal the same date.

Only 13 when "Discovered."

Thus she was a lass of 13 summers when Chaplin "discovered" her three years ago and set her on the ladder of film fame, and a maiden of 16 when he led her to the altar, or rather into a civil magistrate's office at Empalme, Mexico, last week.

This, according to the compulsory schooling law of California, makes Mrs. Chaplin subject to the requirements of edu ational authoriti whose duty it is to see that no minor escapes schooling until after his or her 18th birthday anniversa..

It does not necessarily mean, the school authorities poi ted out that the film comedians bride will have to go back to school, since the law allows instruction by tutors to be substituted for the class room brand. But one way or another, says the law, she will have to "keep up with her lessons."

Chaplin and Bride Secluded.

Neither Chaplin nor his bride could be interviewed, inquiring reporters invariably being met at the Chaplin front gate, with a "Yes, we are not at home," from a Japanese servant."

The same servant made the same speech to Mrs. Lillian McMurray Spicer, mother of the bride, when she and her father, W. F. Curry, hurried to the Chaplin home after the interviewers had sought them out and imparted to them the news.

Before this happened however Mrs. Spicer admitted her daughter's age had been incorrectly stated in the Mexican marriage license, but explained that it was done for "business reasons," the same business reasons which prompted secrecy in all

MONTREAL MERCHANT CONTENT TO PAY FOR RETURN OF GOODS

Detectives Advised Him Best Course Was to Settle With the Thieves.

Merchant Refused to Prosecute When Police Arrested "Fence."

MONTREAL, Dec. 4.—The closing of ground floor pool rooms, the painting of pool room windows, the registration of boarding and rooming houses and the keeping of a register of inhabitants in such houses, a change of the law so as to require second-hand dealers to furnish satisfactory explanations of how they obtained possession of goods they are handling and from whom they got them, and a provision which would enable the police to call upon anyone who lived without working to give an explanation of his means of livelihood, were the principal suggestions offered by Detective George Lajoie at the police inquiry Wednesday, as a means of substantially reducing the amount of crime in the city.

He explained that under existing conditions of the law it was very difficult to make a case against a receiver of stolen goods, as receivers always contended that they had bought them in good faith, and that was the end of the matter.

Certain pool rooms were frequented by young men of a low class who used them as places from which to watch the chance of stealing from passers-by and also as stations for passing stolen property from one to another so as to baffle pursuit, he declared. Boarding houses and private houses with one or two rooms to let were often the hiding places of criminals and also of young women and girls who had disappeared from home.

Asked if He Was "A La Mode"

J. B. Vaillancourt, a shoe merchant, examined by Mr. Lavery, said two or three years ago his residence had been robbed of clothing and furs valued at $5000 and liquor valued at $2000. When he went to the detective officer, he declared, Detective Charette asked him if he was going to be "a la mode."

Mr. Justice Coderre: "What did you understand by that?" "That I would have to pay to get my stuff back."

Witness said he had paid $10 and got his goods back with the excep-

M'GAUGHEY APPEAL REFUSED BY CROWN

Governor-General Unable to Reduce the Supreme Penalty.

OTTAWA, Dec. 3.—"His Excellency the Governor General has considered Frederick William McGaughey's case, and is unable to interfere with the sentence of the court.

ARTHUR BROPHY,
Acting Under Secretary of State."

The above telegram was received in Peterborough late yesterday evening, probably conveying the last word in the case of the Lindsay man who is condemned to die at daybreak on Friday morning for the murder of Beatrice Fee.

Following representations made by McGaughey's counsel, a mental expert, probably the best known alienist in Canada, examined the condemned man and made a report to the Minister of Justice on Monday last. If, therefore, there was any question as to the sanity of McGaughey, the Ministery of Justice would be in possession of the knowledge. On the verdict of the jury, the sentence of the judge, the decision of the Cabinet, and the final word by the Governor General, it must be clear that they are all satisfied that McGaughey knew the difference between right and wrong at the time he committed the crime, and that there is no miscarriage of justice in his paying the extreme penalty of British law.

The scaffold has been built near the condemned man's cell, with an excavation six feet deep under the trap. Only a few steps lie between the prison door and the floor of the scaffold.

GERMAN ADMITS SLAYING EIGHT OF HIS FAMILY

Finger Prints on Ax-Handle Shattered Story of Attack By Robber Band.

WOUNDED HIMSELF

Director of Cement Factory in Westphalia Confessed—Is a Paralytic.

BERLIN, Dec. 4. — (Canadian Press).—"I murdered all eight of them," was the confession exacted from Director Angerstein of a cement factory at Siegen, Westphalia, in whose home eight members of the household were found dead Tuesday and Angerstein himself wounded.

At the time of the discovery of the crime Angerstein said that a band of 25 robbers had attacked his home seeking the payroll of the factory, and killed the eight persons and seriously wounded him and afterwards set fire to the building and fled.

Yesterday's confession was obtained from Angerstein by the police after they had definitely concluded that the physical evidence left on the scene of carnage pointed straight to Angerstein, who is in a hospital, but whose wounds are not considered fatal. Angerstein is a paralytic and is suspected of having committed the murders owing to the fact that he was in financial difficulties.

Angerstein, according to the police, enticed his victims, who included his wife and her mother and a sister, into a room separately and killed them with an axe and a hunting knife. He then poured petroleum around and set fire to the house, cut himself with the axe and stabbed himself with the dagger and then screamed for help.

The suspicions of the police against Angerstein were aroused by the fact that they found his bloody fingerprints on the handle of the axe. Prior to the crime Angerstein had lived happily with his wife. He was known as a quiet and religious man.

JAPAN OBJECTS TO REDUCTIONS IN WAR CRAFT

Refers to Imperialistic Tendencies of Great Britain and the United States.

PUBLIC INTEREST.

KOBE, December 4. — United Press. — Japan has come out flatly in opposition to limitation of auxiliary vessels of war, no matter what the conference may propose.

Japan resisted a proposal limiting auxiliary vessels at the Washington conference three years ago, and is determined to oppose any similar proposal at any future conference, because her geographical and strategical condition will not allow it, officials of the Japanese navy office said to-day.

The Osaka Mainichi broadcast their statement throughout the islands and there is intense public interest in the announcement as well as what may be the next step of the United States.

Navy office officials said the only proposal concerning limitation of auxiliary craft they could entertain would be one fixing the minimum number of each nation. They do not believe that the United States will propose a naval armament limitation conference aimed at auxiliary craft, because it is the opinoin of Japan that such a move would threaten to disturb the peace of the Pacific.

A United States correspondent who is touring in the west of Japan to observe the sentiment of the people on this subject, learned that such a conference would be considered a move to strengthen Great Britain and the United States at the expense of Japan.

The Japanese believe that England and America will shortly discuss their naval strength and the matter of auxiliary craft. It is believed by those for whom a body of Anglo-Saxon offensive alliance has been raised, that France and Italy, as well as Japan, must hold out to the end, against any effort to limit their auxiliary vessels.

"The Imperialistic tendencies of Great Britain and the United States imperil the safey of France, Italy and Japan, therefore the need for an auxiliary craft is going to be felt keenly by the oppressed," is the way the matter has been laid before the people.

"There is undoubtedly public as well as official sentiment against another limitation of the armaments conference."

35TH ANNIVERSARY OF GRAFTON STORE

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Conway, of Peterborough, Present at Event.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Conway have returned from a trip to Owen Sound, where they attended a remarkable celebration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of the opening of the Grafton store in that place. The occasion was made practically a public affair, being held in the town hall, and having the platform occupied by the Mayor, County Council, Colonel Grafton and officials of the firm, including the heads of the different stores in other towns and cities. The Mayor welcomed the visitors and eulogized the local store, which was the first branch started from the parent factory at Dundas in 1889. Peterborough store was next in line, followed quickly by Hamilton, London, Brantford, Woodstock, etc., as the factory increased its capacity and required an enlarged outlet.

NEW IRON AND STEEL SCHEME IS UNDER WAY

London and Brussels Will Be Invited to Participate in Negotiations.

PARIS, Dec. 4. — (Canadian Press).—A combination of European steel and iron interests, with a view to sharing the world's markets and limiting production, is one of the results toward which discussion of the experts framing Franco-German commercial agreement is felt in many quarters to be tending.

A delegation discussing the new agreement has not yet taken up the question, but experts have been working on it, and their conclusions which will be reported to the first full conference of the Franco-German delegates in which iron and steel will be discussed, will be presented with the accompanying suggestion that something must be done to correct the situation arising from the fact that European countries are over-installed for steel production and likely to be drawn into sharp economic war.

London and Brussels will likely be advised and invited to participate in the negotiations.

PRAIRIE CLYDES SWEPT SECTION

Eastern and Western Canada Won High Honors at Livestock Show.

SHEEP AND CORN.

CHICAGO, Dec. 4.—(Canadian Press.)—Eastern and Western Canadian entries continued to capture high honors at the international live stock show again yesterday, the prairie provinces being particularly prominent in the horse and cattle awards, while Ontario again scored in the sheep division and corn.

B. R. Cohoe, of South Woodslee, Ont., furnished a feature surprise of the day in the corn section in carrying off the sweepstakes for "Section Two." This region takes in all districts north of Iowa, and in previous years the first position was taken by either North Dakota or Montana. A sample of white corn took the ribbons.

In the sheep section, Cecil Stobbs, of Wheatley, Ont., took top honors for Dorset Ram two years or over, and for those between one and two years old. Mr. Stobbs also won the ewe championship for Dorsets; first prize for aged flock; yearling flock; and the pen of lambs.

R. S. Robson and sons, of Denfield, Ont., took the first place for a ram lamb among the Lincolns, and S. M. Lee, of Highgate, always a consistent winner, won first place for yearling rams in the same class and first place for two year old rams.

Swept Clydes Class.

In the Clydesdale horse division Saskatchewan entries took all the stallion championships, scoring a clean sweep. "Wee Donald," a spirited animal owned by C. A. Weaver, of Regina, was awarded the senior and grand championships, while Dr. Reid, a prominent western veterinary surgeon of Canora, Sask., won the junior championship and the reserve grand championship with his entry.

In the John Clay & Company specials for the best cattle entered by a university or college, the university of Alberta captured the reserve championship with "Linda's Pride."

There were 25 other colleges in this class, the first prize for the best single animal going to the university of Nebraska on an Aberdeen yearling, while the champion hard prize and the award for the best general exhibit went to State College, of Ames, Iowa.

MR. FULTON DIVES INTO TANK FOR LAST TIME

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—Pugilism's most notorious diver has probably gone into the tank for the last time.

Fred Fulton's flop to Tony Fuente humorously called the heavyweight champion of Mexico, was too much even for the tolerant police authorities of the coast.

From now on the meek Minnesotan will be asked to confine his aquatic demonstrations to the privacy of his own bathtub, if any.

It is hard for psychologists of the ring to determine whether Fulton is beset with weak heart or weak jaw, or both.

His manager refers to him as a "first-class bum". This would seem to be, in the light of recent events, extravagant praise.

Was Expected to "Dive"

Fulton, a reformed plasterer, is winding up a mediocre career in a manner typical of mediocre fighters. Never a championship prospect himself, Fulton is now serving as a means to a promotional end for some of the younger hopefuls.

Fulton was signed to meet Fuente for no other purpose than to "take a dive." Mr. Windy Winsor, who handles the belligerent tamale, obviously had that in mind when the match was made.

Mr. Winsor once had Dempsey but let him get away. Whereupon Mr. Jack Kearns took him and by dint of some shrewd, if questionable, match-making, rushed the Colorado clouter into the richest of all titles.

A motley collection of broken-down stars and never-heard-of set-ups were thrown to Dempsey—the Homer Smiths, Jim Flynns, Bull Sadees, Tony Drakes and Eddie Smiths—and Jack proceeded to flatten them all in jig time.

The Case of Mr. Bonds

Taking his cue from Kearns, Mr Winsor doubtless has visions of building up Fuente just as Kearns built up Dempsey.

Joe Bonds was a diver of no mean ability several years back. You could always count on Joe going into the tank some time between the first and tenth round. His record for consistency appealed to gentlemen interested in promoting Bob Martin soldier heavyweight.

Bonds was picked as Martin's first professional opponent. To give the diver a little "tone" he was brought to Cleveland and established in one of the big hotels a week before the fight. "Go ahead and order anything you want, we'll pay for it," instructed the promoter.

It Worked All Wrong

The good Mr. Bonds, it appeared, had not been eating regularly, and he made the most of this Elysian opportunity. Thick steaks and Idaho potatoes added plenty to his vitality. This and the considerate attitude of the promoters prompted Mr. Bonds to fight his best.

The result was Mr. Bonds did not dive in the FIRST ROUND as had been anticipated. The fight, which was expected to introduce Martin as a new punching sensation, dragged along until the eleventh round.

Mr. Bonds, aged and decrepit, was the hero of the affair, and it took a lot of explaining to keep Martin in the headlines.

COOLIDGE CAUTIOUS IN PROPOSAL OF ARMS REDUCTION CONFERENCE

"Wait and See" Outcome of European Effort, He Tells Congress.

URGES ECONOMY

President Says Government's Task is To Keep Down Expenses.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—(Canadian Press). — President Coolidge submitted to Congress yesterday a broad programme dealing with domestic and foreign affairs but frankly said the chief job for the Government was to keep down expenses.

In the face of the usual December drive for increased appropriations, the executive again made economy his watchword and reminded the Congress that he still stood in the gap to resist increased appropriation bills which would make future tax reduction impossible.

While generally endorsing most of the domestic legislative recommendations, leaders at the capitol saw little hope of translating many of them into law at this session. They will be fairly well satisfied if they can get all of the annual supply measure through before this Congress expires by limitation next March 4.

Sent By Messenger.

Departing from the custom of recent years, Mr. Coolidge did not deliver his message in person. He transmitted it by messenger, and it was read simultaneously in both Houses. Senators and representatives, as well as fairly crowded galleries, gave it close attention. In the Senate there was absence of applause which generally greets executive declarations when made in person, but the House members applauded several of the recommendations.

President Coolidge made no recommendations with respect to immediate tax reduction, but he told the Congress that if it would keep within the limitations of the budget he presented Tuesday it would be possible to have a 'moderate amount of tax reduction and all the tax reform that the Congress may wish for during the next fiscal year.'

He also recommended development of navigation from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic by way of the St. Lawrence River.

On Foreign Affairs.

Two new pronouncements marked the President's discussion of foreign affairs.

Speaking of arms reduction he said that before carrying out his intended proposal to approach the great powers on the question of further conference it would be necessary to wait and see what would be the outcome of the European conference already under consideration.

"I should not wish," he said, "to propose or have representatives attend a conference which would contemplate commitments opposed to the freedom of action we desire to maintain unimpaired with respect to our purely domestic policies."

Proposals to outlaw aggressive warfare, the President asserted, should be carefully studied and sympathetically viewed. He added that the United States had definitely relinquished the old standard of dealing with other countries by terror and force.

Hospital for Sick Children

67 COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Your readers have probably had their appetite for statistics satiated during the past few months. Still they will, no doubt, want to know something of the work accomplished by the hospital to which they have so generously contributed in the past. They are shareholders in a Mission of Mercy. Their dividends are not paid in coin of the realm. May I trespass upon your space to outline what those dividends are?

Firstly, the daily average of children occupying cots in the Hospital for Sick Children was 255. The total cared for as in-patients was 6,397. That is equivalent to the population of a good-sized Ontario town.

And secondly, the out-patient department. This is a wing of offices given over to consultation and minor operations. On an average there were 190 young callers a day.

That is where the dividends are earned—in the difference made in the lives of thousands of children through the voluntary contributions which render it possible to maintain an institution where pallid cheeks become rosy and twisted limbs are made straight.

If that were not dividend enough, one might try to estimate the enormous salvage of child-life in Ontario which has taken place since "Sick Kids" doctors and "Sick Kids" nurses have been going out through this province equipped with a knowledge of children's diseases, which they could not get except in some such highly specialized and pre-eminently efficient institution as the Hospital for Sick Children.

On this year's service the Hospital expended $345,126 and finds itself in the hole to the extent of $134,284. What comes in around Christmas-time keeps the Hospital going. So long as the word "Christmas" retains its original significance could any charity possibly enlist more of the sympathy of your readers or entitle itself to more of their support?

Faithfully yours,

L. E. ROBERTSON,
Chairman Appeal Committee

CHIEF OF POLICE VANDELL IS DEAD

Was Born in Havelock Sixty-Two Years Ago.

BUFFALO, N.Y., Dec. 3.—Chief of Police Andrew VanDell, 62 years old of Albion N.Y. near here, and brother of Mrs. Firman Hague, of Havelock, Ont., near Peterborough, dropped dead Monday morning in his home, in Albion, Chief VanDell was combing his hair in front of a mirror when stricken with heart failure after having shoveled the snow from his sidewalk. His breakfast was on the table waiting him when death came. Chief VanDell was one of the best known officials in this part of New York state and has been head of the Albion police department for nearly twenty years, having served under four mayors. Mr. VanDell was born in Havelock, Ont. He was a member of Albion, N.Y. Lodge, No. 58, of which he was Past Master. He served eleven years as President of the Past Grands Association of Orleans County, N.Y., in which Albion is situated, and several terms as District Deputy of Orleans county. The late Chief VanDell also is survived by his wife, Mrs. Hattie VanDell, and another sister, Mrs. Alexander Hye, of Barre, N.Y. Burial will be in Mount Albion cemetery, Albion, N.Y., and the Albion Lodge of Oddfellows will have charge of the burial service at the grave. The time for the funeral services and interment had not been decided last night.

CAMPBELLF, MILLS POWER

ty Court of Peterborough, be requested to inquire into and report upon the apparent failure of the Peterborough Utilities Commission to charge the Campbell Flour Mills Co., Ltd. for the full amount of electrical power that would appear to have been used by its said mill situate within this city from the month of March 1919 to the month of December 1921 according to the said report of the Hydro-Eelectric Power Commission of Ontario."

Election Issue.

Alderman Joseph Crowe intimated that the matter may be made an issue in the forthcoming municipal election. The people, he said, could signify their opinion as to whether Council is pursuing a course in accordance with their wishes, by voting for or against the candidates for the Aldermanic Board who declared their stand on the inquiry issue.

New Sewer.

A deputation consisting of Messrs. McCartney, Roberts, Scott, Menzies and Smith appeared at the same meeting regarding a proposed sewer on Bethune street. A permit has been obtained from the C.N.R., on whose right of way the property fronts, to lay the sewer. The cost will be $582.75, or, spread over 30 years, $42.46 a year. Mayor Turner suggested assuming the debt at once instead of spreading it over the 30-year period when the total cost will be $1,260.

The city will assume a portion fronting on a vacant corner lot on the same basis as an intersection, and the property owners who are to be served with the sewer will assume all the remaining expense.

Work will be started immediately in order to provide employment for some out-of-work men.

Sewage Disposal Plant.

The completed plans for the proposed sewage disposal plant were submitted by assistant city engineer George W. Perks, who is acting during city engineer R. H. Parsons' absence through illness. Mr Perks interpreted the drawings and explained in detail the work to be undertaken.

If you keep your brown sugar in an open crock in the refrigerator it will never get lumpy.

SOFTENS PAINT BRUSHES.

When paint brushes have become hard, let them stand in a can of vinegar on the back of the stove. This will soon soften them.

Beads are applied to this pink georgette frock in a manner that is different and quite charming. The wide band about the bottom of the skirt and the narrower one going up the front is made of closely woven fringes of irridescent beads. There is a suggestion of a fountain in these tiny cascades that catch the light and reflect it so delicately. The narrow scarf is worthy of interest because the smart scarf is lengthening and becoming less wide.

CUTTING DOWN EXPENSES.

If the operating expenses of the Isolation Hospital can be materially reduced without interfering with the efficiency of the institution, the Board of Health is to be commended upon its efforts to follow up Mayor Turner's proposal by bringing representatives of the two other hospitals into consultation with the board.

It is recognized that the Isolation Hospital is a vital necessity, but the budget under present conditions is not a light one, and the board is justified in endeavouring to hit upon a plan that would ensure a considerable saving.

Difficulties in the way of carrying out the suggestion are apparent, yet they are by no means insurmountable, and it might be possible to dispose of them, if the suggested policy commends itself to the boards of management of the two hospitals.

Mayor Turner introduced the matter in the interest of economy, and if a workable plan cannot be discovered His Worship will at least have the satisfaction of knowing that his motive was of the best and a constructive move on behalf of the ratepayers.

EVERYBODY MUST HELP.

The number of money bylaws submitted to the ratepayers of various Ontario centres at the municipal elections on Monday, and the fact that many of them were defeated, indicate that while the general attitude is against large expenditures at this time there are nevertheless many people in every community who want the public treasury to pay for this, that or the other undertaking.

It is this condition that makes difficult the task of the civic government.

They go into office impressed with the idea that the ratepayers want economy to be the watchword of the administration, and yet a few weeks of service convinces them that in spite of this demand for a reduction in expenditures there are nevertheless large numbers of citizens anxious to have some expensive project or another carried out.

It is possible usually to make out a strong case, too, in favour of the desired undertaking, and as a result, City Councils are often in a quandry as to just what their attitude should be.

The citizens who are always calling upon their civic boards to be economical should do a little quiet thinking over this phase of the matter.

It is just possible that reflection might cause them to see that their desire for saving can best be fulfilled if they themselves set the pace.

In other words, the people who want City Councils to be economical must stop petitioning City Councils to spend money.

THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

An editorial reference in the Toronto Globe not long ago to the necessity of supporting the Toronto Symphony Orchestra is of particular interest just now in view of the appeal that has been made by the Peterborough Symphony Orchestra for financial assistance.

What has been said about the Toronto organization can be said about the local band.

It is true, as the Globe puts it, that it may be said that a city is known by the orchestra it keeps.

In the support of a creditable symphony organization the real love of almost the highest form of art shows itself.

Either there is a widespread interest in music with a civic pride in securing the best possible or there is not ,and the city is to some extent judged accordingly.

The Symphony Orchestra provides, perhaps, the best because it can never be self-supporting.

"During the Great War," says the Globe, "several of the European nations found it worth while to maintain their orchestras for the pleasure and solace of the worried peoples.

Those who step from the strains of business or the noise and bustle of the street in peace times and listen to the harmonies of Beethoven and other old masters are happier for the home circle and stronger for the battles of tomorrow."

Peterborough is fortunate in having in the local Symphony Orchestra the nucleus of a band that is destined to steadily improve, and its exploits at the Ontario Musical Festival indicate that already it occupies a very high place.

It is an organization that merits the enthusiastic support of the community.

ONLY 14.14 PER CENT.

A study of the municipal elections on Monday in different Ontario cities, it is regrettable to have to say, fails to show much improvement in regard to the size of the vote polled.

Ottawa, perhaps, made the best showing in this respect, although even the fact that there was a brisk mayoralty contest on, the card failed to bring out 50 per cent. of those on the lists.

Windsor offered the most glaring example of apathy.

According to the lists, 26,493 residents of the Border City were eligible to vote.

There was no mayoralty contest, but the highest vote recorded in the election for the Hydro Commission was only 3,604.

That means that only 14.14 per cent. of the total possible vote was cast.

When only fourteen out of every one hundred electors consider it worth while to help to select a civic government, it is no wonder that newspapers are endeavouring to bring about a new order of things.

The basic principle underlying municipal elections that they mean the handing over of the city's money to a body of men to expend as they see fit seems to have been lost sight of altogether by 86 per cent. of Windsor's population.

They apparently were content to leave the selection to the other 14 per cent.

They may get good civic government in spite of that attitude, but, frankly, they don't deserve it—and should keep their lips pressed close together if they don't get it.

THE OLD TOWN'S NOT THE SAME.

Kingston people have an old weapon, locally called the Fort Henry gun, that has been fired at noon and 9.30 at night for 75 years. The bang of the old field piece was the barometer of Kingston. When it was heard at noon the men of the place stretched and remarked, "Well, it must be nigh dinner time," and when it banged at 9.30 the gentlemen of the town with one accord reached for their bootjacks, combed their whiskers, and the town was locked up for the night.

Now all this has changed, and on the night of December 1 there was no bang, and the town moved in a disjointed way. Some of the cats were put out for the night at nine, and others not till ten.

Trouble is "economy" at Ottawa. Economists there ask "Why bang?" and Kingston replies "Why not?" and there the matter is deadlocked. When folks get used to moving for 75 years at the sound of two bangs per day it's pretty hard to move smoothly into a bangless age. Kingston has a member in the Commons and one in the Senate, and their one chance to justify their existence is in raiding the treasury for a couple of charges of gun powder.—London Advertiser.

PEOPLING THE WEST.

Western newspapers, in reviewing Mr. Beatty's recent speech in St. Catharines, in which the President of the C. P. R. rebuked those who were impeding immigration to the West, generally commend him for his attitude on this question, the Edmonton Journal remarking: "There is need for such a challenge to those Easterners who would delay the settlement of the West because they fear the influence on the affairs of the Dominion which will be exerted by a larger population on these plains." What opposition there has been to immigration, however, has come mainly from the industrial workers, who fear competition in an already overcrowded market, says the Hamilton Spectator. There is little, if any, objection to the entry of agricultural workers for the West or any other part of Canada. In fact, such immigration is welcomed and encouraged, for it is fully realized, as President Beatty said, that the prosperity of this country depends very largely on an increase of population of the right kind—and competent farm settlers and helpers are emphatically of the right kind. There may be people so curiously constituted that they "fear the influence on the Dominion which will be exerted by a larger population on these plains," but if there be, they are negligible in numbers and influence. The Edmonton Journal itself seems to realize that fact, for it observes: "They are not very numerous and, in any case, they cannot do anything like as much to impede the immigration movement which the country so much requires as can those Westerners who are doing what lies in their power to halt it."

The West can be assured that any well-considered scheme for the settlement of the Prairie Provinces will be approved and assisted by Eastern Canada. When former efforts were made to enlist the moral and material support of the Eastern Provinces in schemes of Western colonization, there was no reason to complain of the response. Eastern industrialists recognize the importance of extending Western markets, and the Canadian people as a whole fully appreciate the necessity for providing more business for the National railways and for securing additional population to share the burdens with which the nation is saddled.

DO GOOD ROADS PAY FOR THEMSELVES?

An interesting line of thought is opened up by an argument which is being advanced in the southern States in favor of state bond issues to pay for good roads. The argument is that good roads which are built and sustained by a tax on gasoline pay for themselves. Why? How?

Because, so the argument runs, good roads enable motor cars to go further on gas than poor roads, and so save the cost of gas to a motorist; that they enable cars to save oil; that they reduce the wear and tear on cars and tires, and save cost that way; and that they lessen the liability to accidents. Therefore, when a motorist pays a tax on gas the proceeds of which are used to improve roads, he is paying something the value of which he gets back in the use of his car.

The Manufacturers' Record thinks the case has been proved by the case of North Carolina. The Record says:

"The gasoline tax in North Carolina, which, as our readers know, has been for several years building one of the finest highway systems in America, will take care of the interest on the bonds and their redemption. But, some may ask, is not this gasoline tax a burden on the people?

It is not. It is paid only by the automobile and motor truck people, and they find that the consumption of gasoline using good roads as compared with bad roads is so much lessened that they are saving money by paying the tax on gasoline. They are likewise saving on their tires, on repairs and on the length of life of their cars.

"The automobile users are, therefore, getting these splendid highways absolutely without cost to themselves, and securing thereby longer life for their cars and tires, greater comfort for themselves in travelling, and greater ability to get around the State and do business. They are, therefore, actually making a profit by paying the gasoline tax."

Further than the direct saving in gas, oil, tires and car wear and tear, the lessening of accidents, there is, of course, a tremendous indirect gain to the community in the comforts, the easier social intercourse and the business advantages which good roads give. Finally, there is the attraction to outsiders. The Manufacturers' Record says:

"Florida has been almost made over in the last ten or fifteen years by its highway construction. About 100,000 cars owned outside of the State annually move into Florida, carrying several hundred thousand people, and the abounding prosperity of that State has been largely the outcome of highway building based on such bonds."

Don't do the good work piece-meal, the idea is. Borrow money freely, and build the good roads fast.

It is difficult to argue against this proposition provided one important condition is to be observed. Namely, that all the proceeds from taxes on automobiles or gas shall go into the road money. If such taxes are not devoted absolutely to the road purpose, there is very little justification for them at all. If they are devoted to good roads, there certainly can be a heap of money available for good roads, and few motorists will grudge the taxes they may pay for that purpose.—Ottawa Journal.

EGG MARKETS.

OTTAWA, Dec. 3. — (Canadian Press).—The egg market continues firm and unchanged in the eastern and prairie provinces, and is easier in British Columbia. Western turkey offers have advanced 3 cents, making an average cost delivered Toronto of 34 cents.

STERLING RATES.

Sterling demand, $4.63 1-8.
Sterling cables, $4.63½.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

CHICAGO, Dec. 3. — (Canadian Press).—Influenced by prospective sudden falling off in the movement of spring wheat north-west and by notable strength in the corn market, all grains scored an advance to-day. Wheat closed unsettled 3-8 to 2 3-8 cents net higher; May 1.61 to 1.61 1-8 and July 141 7-8 to 142, with corn 1¼ to 3 cents up; oats showing 1 to 2 cents gain, and provisions varying from unchanged figurers to a rise of 42 cents. According to reports which were current, arrivals of spring wheat both south and north of the Canadian boundary, were expected to decrease to a great extent within the next ten days. Messages received said many elevators of Canada were scheduled to close, that, broadly speaking, the Canadian crop had already been marketed, and that the last ocean bound ships of the season had left Montreal. Unfavorable crop advices from Argentina as to wheat as well as corn tended also to life values, and to minimize the effect of lower wheat quotations at Liverpool and of rains in the domestic winter wheat belt.

MONTREAL GRAIN.

MONTREAL, Dec. 3.—(Canadian Press).—The export trade in Canadian grain here to-day was reported very dull, there being little demand from English importers for any line at prices that could be accepted. There was practically no change in the condition of the domestic market for cash grain, the demand being of a limited character but the undertone was steady.

Ontario No. 3 extra malting barley was quoted at $1.08, and No. 3 grade at $1.07 per bushel, ex-track, while odd cars of Ontario No. 2 white oats sold at 62 cents, No. 3 grade at 60 cents, and No. 4 grade at 59 cents per bushel, ex-store.

Little business was transacted in spring wheat grades of flour but prices were firm. The market for winter wheat flour was without any new feature to note.

HONESTY HERE COMMENTED ON

Peterboro Man Finds That City Lumber Company Gave Him Full Measure.

NO PROFITEER

In these days of demands for weighing scales and measuring rods under civic administration it is interesting to read the following article written by a Peterborough man and printed in "Canada Lumberman".

During the investigation of the timber administration, sales of limits, revenue to the Department of Lands and Forests, etc., which was conducted by a Royal Commission during the regime of the Drury Government, a great deal was heard regarding "over-run," particularly under the Doyle rule. Various estimates were given as to what should be an average "over-run" on certain runs of logs.

It appears that not only in connection with logs is there an occasional "over-run." A certain citizen of Peterboro, who ordered from a dealer a cord of hardwood slabs the ther day, made the astounding discovery that there was an "over-run" in the cubic contents of the pile. This was so pleasing and startling that he immediately showed his keen appreciation by sending the firm the following characteristic and facetious note.

Messrs. Blank Bros.,
Wood Dealers & Fair Citizens,

Gentlemen:—

I have heard in the past, and before you came into the wood and fuel business, that short cords of wood were purveyed.

This I have neve taken much stock in. Indeed I think, considering their respective births, lineage, political complexions and other hereditary infirmities that fuel dealers are about as straight as other business men. Sometimes the dealer's wood is crooked. But that may be the fault of the growth and not of his dealings.

But, say, listen.

I ordered from your firm a cord of hardwood slabs. Even the rich must take refuge in the fuel of our forefathers. The slab is a means to an end. And the big end of the slab, is ever rough. For I have experienced much slabs.

I had to get the wood out of the lane, where the able but enthusiastic carter had fired it.

Now, listen, carefully.

I piled the wood (viz., slabs) just as neatly as any Methodist should pile anything, except money. This—the money—he doesn't get enough of to pile. Only to pocket.

But to resume. I piled the wood as stated, and found, By Heck, that you had sent to me 128 ft. and four feet over 132 ft. positive measure. This is most astonishing, and sad in social circles to be extremely unusual. It placidly contradicts the general wireless that the fuel dealer is a profiteer, in anything but price. On that point he is understood to be extremely firm.

I am advised that there is a text in the Bible that says somethin, about good measure and running over. Get your pastor to look it up for you. Then ponder it continually.

Yours respectably,
(Signed) ————

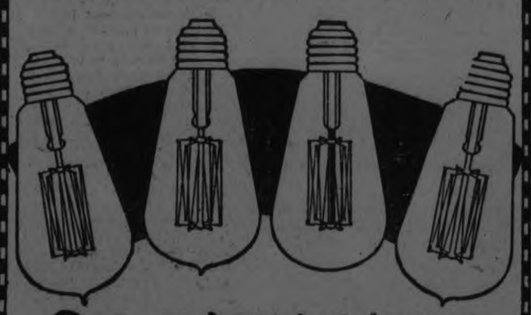
P. S. —I suppose I need not send to you a credit note for the extra four feet. I have an impression that the tail and hoofs always go with the hide.

A THOUGHT.

Better it is to be of an humble spirit with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud. — Prov. 16: 19.

Content thyself to live obscure and good.—Addison.

ELECTRIC "BULBS" MAY LOOK ALIKE BUT—



Only MAZDA LAMPS Can Give You the Best Results

"I WANT SOME BULBS." How often this request is made; yet to purchase electric lamps without specifying the make is like buying the proverbial pig in a poke.

For instance, two lamps may look exactly alike, yet one may have a fine film of moisture on the inside, while the other is perfectly dry. The first lamp will have a much shorter life than the dry lamp.

Two gas-filled lamps may look identical, yet one may contain a rare and costly gas known as argon, while the other will be filled with the cheaper, and much less efficient, nitrogen.

By always specifying Edison Mazda Lamps, you are assured of receiving the latest scientific development in incandescent lighting.

Near you is an Edison Mazda Lamp store, recognizable by the yellow and blue cartons. There you will obtain real information about good lighting.

THOMAS HORNER WITH RAILROAD OVER 50 YEARS

OLD PORT HOPER

Came to This City With the C.N.R. as a Trackman in 1871.

Fifty-four years is more than the average lifetime of man, but when one serves his company for the same number of years, with credit to himself and satisfaction to his employers, it constitutes a record unique in the railroad world. Such service is the record of Thomas Henry Horner, Barrie, who recently retired from the C.N.R.

Born in the township of Hope, county of Durham, seven miles from the town of Port Hope, on October 24, 1856. Mr. Honer naturally took to railroading, for his father was also a railroad man, being employed on the construction of the old Port Hope, Lindsay and Beaverton Railway.

Thos. H. Horner began his railroad career at Garden Hill, between Port Hope and Millbrook, on the Port Hope, Lindsay and Beaverton Railway, now part of the Lindsay division of the Canadian National Railways, at the age of twelve years, in the year 1868, piling wood for the wood-burning engines which were exclusively used in that early age of railroading. Incidentally, it might be mentioned that the cars of that day were of ten and twelve-ton capacity, with the up-to-date locomotive (as it was called) pulling about fifteen of these loaded cars over the division—a wonderful contrast from today, when the modern type locomotive draws 100 to 150 fifty-ton cars with the greatest ease.

At that date locomotives used wood exclusively as fuel. The cars had pin-and-link couplers, that is, they were coupled by a semi-oblong link and held together by two small iron pins of about an inch in thickness. The brake-shoes were made of wood and the train was stopped by the brakeman applying a hand-brake, which duty in most cases they had to perform by climbing over cars, piled high with cordwood, and dropping down between to apply the brake. This was extremely hazardous, and many a fine young Canadian lost his life by dropping in between, or the cars leaving the improvised track and his body being crushed under the debris.

Mr. Horner moved to Peterboro in 1871 as trackman. The rail in use then was iron, 56 lbs. to the yard, coupled together by iron chairs spiked to the ties, and the gauge (between) was five feet six inches. As there were other small railroads in Ontario, each with its own gauge, cars for one railroad could not be run on another; therefore, it became necessary to standardize the gauge so that cars might be despatched to points on other roads and thus obviate the necessity of transferring the contents.

After about six months at Peterboro, Mr. Horner was transferred in the same capacity to Lakefield, then a small but industrious village, the chief industry of which was saw-milling, the logs and timber being rafted from Stoney Lake down to the Otonabee River to the mills at Lakefield. He was stationed at this point until 1881, when he was transferred back to Peterboro as foreman and was in charge of operations when the famous "missing link" was constructed between Peterboro and Omemee, which many of the old-timers will recall. He remained there until 1895.

Square timber, logs, lumber and cordwood made up the chief freight handled by the railways, so it became necessary to build an addition to the short railway to Port Hope and Belleville to connect with the existing Grand Trunk Railway. Much of the changes and improvements at Port Hope for handling the traffic were under Mr. Horner's supervision, as the town of Port Hope was the chief port on Lake Ontario where the square timber and lumber was transferred to ships for export. His ability and efficiency was soon further recognized, for on July 17, 1895, the late Superintendent Tiffin appointed him as roadmaster and supervisor of tracks at Allandale.

Railroading even then was far from being as modern as it is today. The type of engine and cars used on the northern division was still small in comparison with those used now. Consequently as heavier engines and cars have been introduced, it has been necessary to improve the tracks and road-bed. Three times, due to heavier power during the past twenty-nine years, it has been necessary to increase the weight of rail—first, from 56 to 68 lbs.; second, from 68 to 80, from Toronto to South River; third, from 80 to 100 lbs., Toronto to Gravenhurst.

Evidence of the high quality of work done under Mr. Horner is seen in the fact that the road under his supervision between Orillia and Toronto was regarded by the chief engineer as the best piece of track on the Grand Trunk system.

Mr. Horner modestly states that this efficiency could only be attained by efficient and loyal employees who worked with him, and no better staff of men could be found than those he has left to carry on in the company's service. Not only did he receive from his own men the best they could give, but the employees of all other departments were ready to co-operate willingly and effectively, and he attributes his success on the railway to the whole-hearted support accorded him.

Mr. Horner had two brothers, both in the employ of the Canadian National Railway, James, roadmaster at Edmonton, who died in 1920, and John, forman at Millbrook, who died in September, 1924, at Peterboro.

During his 54 years of service many changes have taken place in the personnel of the staff and employees. He has served under five superintendents—Supts. Taylor and Ferguson at Port Hope and Supts. W. R. Tiffin, P. J. Lynch and W. E. Weegar at Allandale. On every occasion, says the veteran track supervisor, their advice and co-operation was valued and conduced to better service and efficiency.

Mr. Horner was signally honored by his fellow employees of al departments upon his retirement on Nov. 1st inst., when about 175 gathered at the Allandale restaurant to say good-bye to one who had endeared himself to them by his faithful service and genial manner. It is with particular pride and gratefulness he exhibits a diamond tie pin and cane presented to him by his associates on that occasion.

Many congratulatory letters have been received from officials and friends extending best wishes to him. For all these thoughtful remembrances he expresses his sincere thanks, and hopes that those who follow him will receive the same courtesy and consideration which has been extended to him.

IMPROVEMENTS TO LAKEFIELD'S PARK

LAKEFIELD, Dec. 3.—Work is being carried on at the village park in a manner which does credit to the public-spirited members of the community. A good road is being built, not only to the entrance of the park, but around it and straight through. The effort is a purely voluntary one; and has not cost the village one cent as work and money have been contributed. It is a beautiful spot and every effort has been made to make it not only ornamental but useful to the village as well.

At the morning service in St. John's Church, Mr. H. F. Strickland played the violin accompanying the hymns and chants. It is three years since Mr. Strickland has played in Lakefield and it was a great treat to hear him again.

The W.A. made their corporate communion at the 11 o'clock service, as is their custom on St. Andrew's Day. The presence of their president, Mrs. White, who has been very ill for the past few months, was an added occasion for Thanksgiving.

A.Y.P.A. Council.

A number of members of the St. John's branch of the A.Y.P.A. are attending the district council banquet in Peterboro' on Thursday night in All Saints' schoolroom.

DRINK WATER IF BACK OR KIDNEYS HURT

Begin Taking Salts if You Feel Backachy or Have Bladder Weakness.

Too much rich food forms acids which excite and overwork the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Flush the kidneys occasionally to relieve them like you relieve the bowels, removing acids, waste and poison, else you may feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, the stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get irritated, obliging one to get up two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste, begin drinking water. Also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine and bladder disorders disappear.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to help prevent serious kidney and bladder disorders.

By all means, drink lots of good water every day. Have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.

FIRED FARMER'S BARNS.

Hired Man, Dismissed, Took Revenge on Employer — Damage $10,000.

OTTAWA, Dec. 3.—Alex Jessaman, aged 29, pleaded guilty in the County Court to-day to a charge of arson, and was sentenced to six months' hard labor. The prisoner had been acting as farm manager to George A. B. Read, of South Marsh, near here, and when advised last month that he would no longer be needed he set fire to the year's crop and barns, causing damage estimated at $10,000. Read claimed that Jessaman owed him $300 under his share of a farming agreement between them and Jessaman either became despondent or set fire to the buildings and crop in revenge.

Answering a request by Crown Attorney J. A. Ritchie that Jessaman might be deported, Judge O'Brien, the presiding judge, expressed his objections to such a method and said the prisoner was yet to become a good citizen of Canada.

MONTREAL MERCHANT

tion of a $400 overcoat. He explained that it was Detective Pelletier who had finally stepped in and recovered the goods for him. Later he had received a letter containing a check-room ticket and had gone to Windsor and recovered the coat. He had not recovered the liquor.

Pressed as to which detective he paid the $10, witness named Pelletier. He said he had paid $15 altogether, but it developed that $5 of this was to Chief Lorrain for watching his house while he was away. The commisioner ruled that Chief Lorrain's name could not be mentioned as the inquiry did not concern the provincial police.

Mr. Vaillancourt said Pelletier had practically told him where the liquor was and witness had had a man named Orville Lacombe arrested.

Emile Depocas, an advocate, said he had heard of the location of the liquor, but not through the detectives. A man had been arrested, but the case had been abandoned for lack of evidence when it reached the court stage. Pelletier had told him that he had received a telephone call saying that the stolen goods would be planted in a lane. He had been with Vaillancourt and Pelletier when the goods were found in the lane.

Denies Receiving Money.

Joseph Pelletier, sergeant of detectives, testified that he had not been assigned to this case, but had ran across it while recovering a stolen automobile. The man he had arrested had tipped him off that the Vaillancourt liquor was to go to Sudbury. He had failed to locate it.

Mr. Justice Coderre: "Did you ever get the ten dollars?" "Never."

Vaillancourt, recalled, identified Pelletier, and said he had given him the money at a corner on Craig street. He also said that the Lorrain to whom he had given the $5 was not Chief Lorrain of the provincial police, but a Lorrain who had been attached to number five station.

M. Sobie, of the Sobie Silk Shop, testified that Detectives Brooks and Tourville had been detailed to a robbery in which witness had lost goods valued at $5,000. After the detectives had been to see him, witness had found out by another means where the goods were and that he could buy them back. When the detectives returned they showed him photos of the men thought to be the thieves and also said he could buy his goods back. When he asked why an arrest was not made, the detectives replied there was no evidence as to where the goods were.

Paid $200 Demanded

Witness continued that the goods had been returned by parties who drove up in a big car with the goods wrapped up "just as if they were making a delivery from the factory." He had paid $200 they demanded.

Asked whether he was satisfied with the work of the detectives, witness said he had not come to complain, but just to tell the circumstances. He had told the detectives he was about to pay money to the people who had robbed him and they had thought it was the best thing under the circumstances.

Refused to Swear Out Warrants

Cross-examined, witness said he did not know the name of the man who returned his goods, nor of the man to whom he paid the money. He had heard that there were people at the North Eastern Lunch, who could return stolen goods, so he went there and got in touch with two people who said they woud try and find his stuff. He had returned next day, when the men demanded $600, but he finally got them down to $200. The goods had been returned quite openly. He admitted that he had been asked to go to the courthouse and swear out a warrant against a Nathan Goldberg, but had refused.

Detective Tourville testified that after Sobie had told him that he was paying to get his goods back, witness had suggested watching the store to catch the men, but Sobie had asked the detectives not to do so. Later, Sobie had said that it was Nathan Goldberg who had brought the stuff back, but when Sobie had been asked to swear out a warrant, Sobie had replied: "Oh, its' a joke now; I have got my goods back." The detectives had sworn out the warrant themselves, but when Goldberg appeared in court Sobie had denied accused was the man, and the case was dismissed.

J. B. Puusecs, proprietor of a French weekly publication, was questioned about an article he had published, giving what counsel described as disgusting details of what went on in certain clubs. Witness admitted that he had no personal knowledge of the matter. He had been told about these things and had written them up. Very probably the places did not exist at all and the whole thing might have been imaginary. His paper was a humorous one and not meant to be taken too seriously. He admitted that the suggestion that these clubs were tolerated and perhaps protected by the police was not true.

Hampered By the Law.

Detective Geores Lajoie was shown a list of names and asked if he knew any of them that were malefactors and yet at liberty. He said he reconized some of them as the names of malefactors and men who were known never to work. The question of why these men were at liberty although known to be of shady character brought out the fact that there was much crime that could not, according to the witness, be traced in the present state of the law.

He cited a case where he had found a second hand dealer who bought 120 or 130 motometers in 60 days. These things cost about $8 or $10 each. They formed an integral part of an automobile and were not detachable like spare parts, to be bought separately and fitted on by the owner like a spare tire. It struck him as strange that 120 automobile owners in two months should have been reduced to such a state of poverty as to have had to tear the motometers off their cars and sell it for a dollar or so. He made a test case against this man and the second-hand dealers got together and hired two lawyers to defend with the result that the second-hand dealers won the case.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

PETTY OFFICER M. COOK

His Auto-Intoxication Had Nothing To Do With Volstead

Mr. M. Cook of 1236 Pacific Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I felt 'drunk' most of the time. My head was dizzy, I couldn't think clearly. I paid no attention to it until one day I dropped a coin and when I stooped to get it, I got so dizzy I fell in the middle of the street and was almost run over. I later found out that the cause of this condition was due to a sluggish liver causing FAULTY INTESTINAL ELIMINATION (constipation). This was promptly and effectively overcome by a short course of Carter's Little Liver Pills. They were a life-saver in my case. My appetite has doubled, my dizziness has gone, and my pep is great." Carter's Little Liver Pills have been recommended by druggists everywhere for 67 years. 25c a package.

Cars were there from Campbellford, Trent River, Hastings, and Norwood but nothing could be done. The cause of the fire was the explosion of a lantern.

PROMISE SUIT IN VANCOUVER

Cuddle Letters From Lawyer Read in Court—A $75 Gold Fish.

VANCOUVER, B.C., Dec. 4.—Claiming that C. S. Arnold, Vancouver barrister, wrote her fervid love letters just prior to the hearing of her divorce hearing in Toronto last year, Mrs. Elma Catharine Caulfield, former wife of Charles Campbell Caulfield, is suing the lawyer for breach of promise. The action, involving as it does, not only the well known local barrister, but indirectly R. W. Wood, millionaire part-owner of the Premier Mine, the richest mine in Canada, is causing the biggest legal sensation in recent years here.

Trial is before Mr. Justice Morrison, the most caustic of British Columbia judges. The case immediately follows one in which Mrs. Caulfield sued Arnold for the recovery of $15,000 paid the lawyer under an alleged champertous agreement arising from a threatened action by her against Wood. The woman alleged that an attack in the Hotel Vancouver by the mine owner cost her an eye. The assault case was settled out of court on payment of $100,000 by Wood to Mrs. Caulfield, witnesses declared. Arnold allegedly taking fifteen per cent of theproceeds. The lawyer's defense was that $15,000 was the amount of his bill.

Mr. Justice Morrison reserved decision on the first Caulfield-Arnold action and immediately commenced hearing the breach of promise case.

How Love Blossomed

A prepossessing figure in the witness stand, Mrs. Caulfield, testified that acquaintanceship blossomed into love, and she bought and furnished a mansion in anticipation of their marriage. When reversal of fortune came, however, she declared the barrister left. One of the troubles between them, she claimed was that she refused to sell her jewellery to pay some of the household bills. They lived together in the house for some considerable time.

After she had gone to Toronto to arrange about her divorce from Caulfield, Arnold wrote her the following letter, read in court:

"Well, lover, I wish you were back here for me to trick up in your little trundle bed and kiss and hug with a great big hug, for you I miss most awfully. I hope things will be arranged in Toronto so we can settle down and get married and cuddle up together."

Desire For Cuddles.

Another epistle ran: "I want to cuddle up and love and kiss you, lover, for notwithstanding my eccentricities, I love you with my whole heart. I want to make you happy."

"I will make you happy to know that if things do not go along as we wish we will still go through life together just as if we were married. I gave you my promise to be true and I will keep it forever. From hubby and lover, too."

On the stand, Mrs. Caulfield said: "Before I went east we discussed the bridesmaids and ushers for our wedding. My trousseau, costing several thousand dollars, and a wedding cake of about $200, was purchased, following Mr. Arnold's proposal of marriage, subject to me obtaining a divorce from my husband.

"I was going back to a man whom I had kept company with in the east but Arnold asked me not to marry that man, but to wait a while until he would be in a position to look after my future," she stated.

A $75 Gold Fish.

Continuing, witness said defendant undertook the matter of obtaining her divorce and that instructions were given to a Toronto firm of lawyers. Later she obtained a divorce. Cross-examined, witness denied defendant had ever complained of her extravagance.

She admitted buying a gold fish in Toronto for $75, and also purchasing 20 more of them with the idea of raising them as a business. A piano cost $2,750, but it was not paid.

Witness admitted being convicted of bigamy in 1920 in Edmonton, a suspended sentence being ordered. She had believed that Mr. Caulfield had got a divorce.

Counsel for the defendant argued that Mrs. Caulfield had broken off the engagement when she told the defendant that if he was not going to "keep his end up" in the matter of household expenses he could "get out." "And my client 'got out,'" said counsel.

The defence is that a legal promise of marriage could not be given while either of the parties was married. Arnold does not deny the facts.

BUTTER EXPORTS ON THE INCREASE

Canada is Winning Back Her Overseas Dairy Market.

The "New York Commercial" of recent date carries an interesting little item with regard to the increase in the past two years in the amount of butter and cheese exported to the Orient from Canada. In this period of time, the quantity sent to Japan alone has increased in an extraordinary manner. For instance, in 1922, butter exported from Canada to Japan amounted to only 7681 pounds, while this year, to date, one western dairy company alone has exported 200,000 pounds, while there are five other companies in the same business. In 1922 the amount of cheese shipped to Japan from Canada was only eighty-five pounds, while one company has shipped already this year 10,000 pounds.

That Canada is also winning back her overseas dairy markets in the United Kingdom is evidenced by her increased exportations.

For the nine months' period ending September 30th, Canada exported to the United Kingdom 46,651 cwts. of butter as compared with 10,714 cwts. for the same period in 1923. At the same time, New Zealand, Canada's biggest competitor in the Old Country butter market, showed a decrease in her exports with a record of 863,430 cwts. for the period mentioned above as against 940,120 cwts. during the same period in 1923. Denmark exported butter to the United Kingdom to the amount of 1,399,470 cwts. last year. Australia and the United States were also down in their exports this year, thus showing that the four largest exporters of butter to the Old Country during the first nine months of this year decreased their exports while Canada showed a nice increase.

This increase in exports of butter over Australia is significant when it is remembered that Australia captured first place in butter over Canada, with all the prizes going to her, at the recent British Dairy Show. It is pointed out that a great deal of the increase in the butter exportations was from the province of Alberta, where rigid regulations as to grading of cream are enforced, and indicates, as The Canadian Grocer says: "That a little more of the same medicine (rigid grading) spread over the other provinces undoubtedly would again place Canada at the head of the list of butter exporters such as she enjoyed twenty or more years ago.

At the forty-sixth annual dairy show of the Bristol Dairy Farmers' Association held at the Royal Agricultural Hall, London, England, during the last week in October there were twenty entries in the class for colonial Cheddar cheese, with six entries from Canada, seven from New Zealand, four from Australia, two from South Africa and one from East Africa. All the awards were captured by Canada.

At the British Dairy Show also, Canadian cheese swept the board by landing three out of five firsts, and Canada won leading place in honey and bacon. Australia captured first place in butter, and South Africa won everything with eggs.

The popularity of Canadian apples in the United Kingdom is demonstrated by the shipments which took place in one week in October, from the 15th to the 22nd. To the ports of London, Liverpool, Manchester Southampton, Hull, Newcastle and Avonmouth, went 17,500 boxes of apples from British Columbia and 37,000 barrels from Nova Scotia. Cardiff and Glasgow took the western product exclusively, the Welsh port taking 1,000 boxes from British Columbia, and the Scotch port 27,000 boxes, while the Irishmen of Belfast were the only buyers of Ontario apples, taking 1,000 barrels from this province.

The "New York Commercial" also publishes a prophetic estimate of the wheat export from the Dominion this year. It says:—"Canada may export about one hundred and eighty million bushels of wheat this year, should the crop estimate be borne out by final returns. Last year, according to the Department of Agriculture's analysis of crop and carryover figures, Canada exported three hundred and forty-three million bushels. The carryover of twenty-eight million bushels from last year's crop, plus the estimated crop of two hundred and seventy-two million bushels this year, makes available three hundred million bushels for this year's supply, compared with four hundred and eighty-six million bushels available for last year. The grade of grain now in the elevators indicates that the quality of the crop is below that of last year. Losses from unmerchantable grain and in cleaning have varied recent years from five to ten per cent of the gross production."

Mr. Arnold Joyce Broke His Arm While Cranking Car —A Farewell Party.

CAMPBELLFORD, Dec. 4.—Mrs. J. W. Taylor, Sebastapool street, received the following item from her mother in England, regarding their golden wedding celebration:

Broke His Arm.

Mr. Arnold Joyce had the misfortune to break his arm at the wrist on Wednesday just after dinner. He had motored down town after his dinner and before going to his store he stopped at Birk's drug store for his paper. In cranking the car the large bone in his right wrist was broken. The doctors attended him, but it will be several weeks before he will be able to do much work.

It was only last summer when his little daughter had her arm broken.

Farewell Party.

A number of the girl friends of Mrs. John Haig, Jr., (nee Evelyn Peeling) met at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Peeling, Centre street, for a farewell party, before she goes to live in Seymour. The house was decorated in blue and white and silver. The evening was spent with cards, music and a social time. Mrs. Haig received a lot of lovely presents. A dainty lunch was served at the close of the evening.

The bride gave each guest a souvenir, a dainty fancy box with some wedding cake in it, tied with white ribbon.

Wednesday afternoon was the regular meeting of the Imperial Order of the daughters of the Empire but as few ladies were present the meeting had to be postponed.

Mrs. C. W. Turner's class of young men and women, met at her home for their regular monthly evening on Wednesday night.

The evening was spent playing games, having music and recitations. Each one was asked to compose a verse about Christmas and read it during the evening. These verses were well thought out and were enjoyed by those who heard them. Six of the boys and girls are responsible each month for the evening's entertainment. There were about twenty present. Light refreshments were served at the close of the evening.

SETTELL CASE BEFORE COURT

Accused Was "Entertainer" for the Hydro Commission.

HAMILTON, Dec. 4.—(Canadian Press).—Pleading not guilty, E. Clarence Settell, former private secretary to Sir Adam Beck, appeared for trial at the jury sessions of the County Court yesterday. He is charged with stealing $29,925, not from the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission, but from the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and with intent to defraud, by inducing W. H. Childs to endorse a Hydro cheque for the above amount.

The Crown's case was completed last night. The trial is continuing to-day.

In reviewing the case to the jury, Crown Attorney George H. Ballard said that Settell cashed a Hydro cheque for $29,925 here on October 3rd. He then told of how accused motored to St. Catharines and was subsequently apprehended at Niagara Falls.

Settell is represented by R. H. Greer, K.C., of Toronto.

The fact was established by Mr. Greer that Settell was "entertainer" for the Provincial Hydro Commission. It was also acknowledged that Settell had been drinking rather excessively prior to his mad venture. It was emphasized that after being arrested at Niagara Falls he had done everything possible to aid the police. Evidence was then given by W. H. Childs, secretary of the local Hydro Commission, who told of how Settell came to his office and requested that he identify at the bank so that a cheque could be cashed. Mr. Childs said he scrutinized the cheque, but never for a moment doubted its genuineness. Neither did he doubt Settell's statement that money was needed for the purchase of a right-of-way. He believed that Settell would have been entitled to a substantial pension had he remained in the service of the Hydro for another ten years.

The interception of $7,760 which Settell sent to Montreal by registered mail was told of by Deputy-Commissioner Cuddy of the Provincial Police. Most of it was for his wife and his mother. There was $250 to Mr. Childs, who endorsed Settell's cheque, and $325 to O'Keefe's Brewery of Toronto. The lengthy letter to Sir Adam Beck since the object of judicial investigation was also in this parcel. This parcel of mail was addressed to Settell's sister resident in Montreal. There was enclosed a letter, which read in part:

"I want to get away out of the city. It's booze, booze, booze, and everybody expects it at my place. I am going on a water wagon for a year. You will hear more from me in a month or two. Take this $500 and go and see mother at Port Stanley. Do not be afraid to spend it, for I will send you more later."

CONFESSED TO THE BUTCHERING OF 27

Tore Open Throat of 27 Boys With His Fang-Like Teeth.

(By Carl D. Groat, United Press Staff Correspondent)

BERLIN, Dec. 4.—On the heels of the gruesome murder of eight persons a Siegen which was discovered yesterday, to be the work of one man, Germany experiences fresh horrors today with the opening in the Hanover Criminal Court of the trial of Fritz Haarmann, accused of butchering twenty-seven boys.

One hundred and ninety witnesses many of them hysterical mothers of Haarmann's victims were in the Sombre, antiquated court room, when the state opened its case.

Haarmann has already confessed that he killed the youths, tearing their throats open with his fang-like teeth and afterwards quartering the bodies and throwing the remains into the muddy waters of the River Leine which flows past his hovel on the outskirts of Hanover.

BLINDNESS EXPECTED.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—(Canadian Press).—On verge of total blindness, Basil King, Canadian Novelist is far from being depressed, complete darkness, which he admits will soon be his fate, inspires him, instead of weighing him down.

He was smiling and happy as he waited today for the Mauretania to take him on its way to Spain where he will spend the winter in search of literary material.

Dreams

One of the predominating dreams that enter the nightly visions of young women is the bridal costume.

Nearly every young woman will admit that she has at some time seen herself attired in bridal attire. Such a dream is often important.

If one seems happy while in such attire, good fortune, happiness, success in love and business are destined for them. While on the contrary to be moody and ill at ease in such attire forbodes of illness, unhappy marriage and loss of friends and money.

Interpretations.

You are going to engage in a flirtation if you dream of opening an umbrella for another to walk under.

To be unable to gain your footing after a fall is quite likely a warning that you will soon meet with adversity hard to overcome.

News from a distance, which will bring happiness into your life, will reach you soon after the ringing of chimes has died out of your dreams.

CONFESSED TO ROBBERY.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—(Canadian Press).—George Rifkin, 26 year old tailor, was alleged last night by the police to have confessed that he was one of three men who held up and robbed a mail truck in Montreal on August 4th last. Rifkin is said to have stated that his share of loot was $1,300. Rifkin is the fifth man arrested in connection with the case. A Montreal warrant was served on him as he was walking up Broadway.

HEALTH FABLES.

TEACHING GOOD HABITS

"Your baby is started out in life with a sound, healthy body," remarked the family doctor to Mr. Mann some weeks after the arrival of the firstborn of Mr. and Mrs. Mann, "but as yet it has developed no habits of mind or body.

"And that's where your responsibility comes in. Its body, as it now stands, is in good shape, but what will you do to help that child keep in good shape and his mind in growth? Almost anybody can bring a child into the world. That's nothing to dance and crow about. It's what you do with the child that gives you the dancing privilege.

"It is remarkable how easily a baby will acquire either good or bad habits.

"Habits—that's an important word. Probably the first step is to develop the habit of regular feeding. It establishes regularity of parents as well as of child and it's the first regular habit you can teach the baby.

"Next, you can establish regular hours for sleep, for play, for exercise, for the bath—all very important in the health of the body.

"A child soon learns how much it can get away with by crying—but whether it's crying, or sucking the thumb, or breaking things that the child chooses to indulge in, don't let it get the habit.

"A habit is best broken at the start, and easiest developed at the start, as well."

"I suffered for three years with eczema which broke out on my limbs, and soon spread to my neck and forehead. It itched and burned so that it was most impossible to sleep at night, and every time I scratched it, it would bleed. The breaking out caused disfigurement. "I began using Cuticura Soap and Ointment and after the first week I got relief. I continued the treatment and in about six months I was completely healed." (Signed) Mrs. George Pottle, R. F. TEAM SCATTERED LOAD OF CHEESE

Driver Was Run Over and Leg Injured in Springbrook Mishap.

PETHERICK'S CORNERS, Dec. 4.—What might have ended in a very serious accident occurred on Monday in Springbrook, while Mr. James Milne was unloading a load of cheese. He drove alongside a car, stopped, and walked out on the tongue to throw the blankets on his team. When they became frightened and started down the railroad track, Mr. Milne was thrown beneath the wagon, which ran over his left ankle and bruised it very badly although the doctor does not think that there are any bones broken. The team took the road of least resistance and followed the railway track for some distance until they became discouraged and thought that they would take a rest.

The load of cheese was captured all along the track for about half a mile, although some of the boxes were seriously damaged, but the cheese was not damaged to any great extent.

The team does not appear to be any the worse for the excitement except that they were quite stiff after running such a distance with such a load. The wagon was not damaged although the cheese rack was badly broken.

"Liver Trouble so Severe I Had to Quit Work"

Mr. Thomas Honey, Brantford, Ont., writes:

"I was a great sufferer from enlargement of the liver for ten months, and finally I had to quit work. I would wake up in the mornings with a bitter taste in my mouth, had frequent headaches, yellow complexion, and pain in my right side, and between the shoulder blades. It was almost unbearable, and terribly weakening. I could not sleep at night and my heart also bothered me. But the whole trouble has now left me, thanks to that wonderful medicine, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills."

AUTO SENSE — SAVE ON YOUR TIRES — By Williamson

Have you noticed the number of old cars which have been "shod" with the newest type of tires? Every time one of these changeovers is made four or five cord tires are traded in. The dealer allows a few dollars for the old tires, which in many cases are in good condition and have thousands of miles left in them. Before you buy a replacement tire, go to your dealer and ask him to show you what he has in this line. You will be surprised at the value you can receive.

If you are interested in this tip, you should use care in selecting used tires. You should make sure that the tire you are considering has not been rim-cut and has no thin kind. Also examine the outside of the tire to be sure that the sides have not been scraped against curbing and ruts until the rubber is badly eaten away. If this is the case and you find that the remaining rubber on the walls is cracked, water may have gotten into the cord layers, rotting them until the tire is weakened.

CONSERVATIVE ASSOCIATION MET ANNUAL CONVENTION AND ELECT V. J. M'ELDERRY TO PRESIDENCY

Roland Denne Again Nominated for the Position—Members From Newly Added Territory of Constituency Included in List of Officers.

THE ADDRESSES.

V. J. McElderry was elected president of the Liberal-Conservative Association of West Peterborough, at a convention of the party held last evening in Victoria Hall, attended by about 125 people, including a dozen women. Roland Denne, president for the past two years, was nominated again for the position, but declined, nominating Mr. McElderry, who was accepted unanimously by the meeting. In the personnel of the organization for this year, inclusion was made of members from the newly-added ridings of Otonabee, Lakefield, and Douro, according to a decision arrived at after some discussion to form an organization for Federal election purposes, arrangements for Provincial organizations to be considered at a future date. The following are the new officers:

President, V. J. McElderry; 1st vice-president, Dr. J. R. Fraser of Lakefield; 2nd vice-president, J. H. Spence; 3rd vice-president, Colonel David Johnston of Otonabee; recording secretary, J. F. Strickland; treasurer, Roland Denne; Auditor, W. R. Morris.

Other nominations for the variqus offices included that of H. Fitzgerald, of Lakefield, as first vice-president, and several nominations for treasurer, an office which it was found difficult to fill, and which was declined in turn by G. Boucher, Dr. M. A. Morrison, R. M. Waddell, Cecil Williamson and C. Coon.

The nominations, which were verbal, with a standing vote, were conducted in an efficient manner by J. R. McNicol of Toronto, president of the Liberal-Conservative Association of Ontario and of the Dominion.

Seated on the platform were Donald Sutherland, M.P., for South Oxford, W. H. Bradburn, M.P.P., Dr. M. A. Morrison, ex-president of Association, H. Fitzgerald of Lakefield, president of the East Peterboro Liberal-Conservative Association, Roland Denne, ex-president; W. Boulton, A. J. Fallis, M.P.P., for East Durham, J. H. Spence and J. F. Strickland.

At the conclusion of the elections, Mr. McNicol called the new president (Mr. McElderry) to the chair, and the speaker of the evening, Mr. Donald Sutherland, M.P., for South Oxford, was introduced.

Mr. Sutherland's address dealt mainly with a review of the difficulties encountered by the redistribution committee, of which he was a member, and touched briefly on some of the practices of the King government with regard to special officials, including Mr. Duncan Marshall and W. T. R Preston.

Re-distribution Work.

He referred to the system by which a redistribution takes place after each decennial census, as an evidence of the wisdom of those who drafted the constitution of the Dominion, but characterized the method of conducting the recent redistribution as "one of the most unfair jerrymanders ever attempted in the Province of Ontario. What the government proposed to do in Conservative constituencies would not very well bear the gaze of the public. The Conservative members of this committee were cajoled and threatened with something worse than what did happen if we did not agree to their demands. The Prime Minister's instructions with regard to adherence to county boundaries wherever possible, were disregarded by the six governmental members in such a manner as left no doubt that the Prime Minister had no intention of having these orders carried out."

Mr. N. P. Sutherland went on to cite numerous instances in which political exigency was the watchword of the Governmental members of the committee and their allies, the Progressive members. The Muskoka section, he said, was made an absolutely unworkable constituency, and there were now fifteen right angles in the boundary between the two Algomas.

He considered the arguemnt advanced in the case of the Peterboro riding, that the population of 43,000 was unwieldly, as contrary to the practice carried out in other ridings where the desires of the Government dictated different methods. He said: "There are 67 consituencies in this province, with an average population of 31,275. Russell was left untouched, although it had considerably more population than the two Peterboros, North and South Bruce and Glengarry, with 64,800 people, have three members, while Welland, with 66,668 of a population, has one member. This is an evidence of the unfairness of the redistribution that has been passed.

The Transferable Vote.

"Now their next move is going to be to introduce the transferable vote in single-member constituencies. The only justification for that is that there is an inequality in many constitutiences and they think they can overcome it in this way. With the understanding between the Progressives and the Liberals they hope to accomplish with the transferable vote the method of freezing out one candidate in three-cornered contests. For instance, if one candidate on the first vote does not obtain a large enough majority to overbalance his two opponents, he drops out. So unless a Conservative, say, has a large enough majority on the first count, on the second he will be counted out, because the other fellows have a second chance and he hasn't. And this is in a country where British laws and British fair play are supposed to be in effect. If this Act is passed, and it probably will be, it will be one of the most unfair pieces of legislation ever attempted."

Passing to a consideration of the recent by-election results in West Hastings, Mr. Sutherland recalled a visit made by him to the Hotel Quinte during the campaign and his impression that the entire Governmental batteries were lined up in the struggle. He referred to the appointment of Mr. Duncan Marshall, the organizer of the Liberal party, as Commissioner of Agriculture at a salary of $6.000 a year, as a 'brazenly illegal' appointment, without authorization, according to the statement of the Auditor-General, and spoke of his own efforts to secure information as to this appointment and its meaning from a committee presided over by the Deputy Speaker, G. N. Gordon, who, he asserted, at once shut off all discussion of the item and the salary of the so-called Commissioner of Agriculture. "So when I saw Mr. Marshall dining in the Hotel Quinte at Belleville with the man who had used his authority to shut off all discussion as to his salary, when such information was requested by a member of the House, I wondered what was going to happen in West Hastings."

Mr. Sutherland also referred to the Government's prodigal expenditure in various schemes, including the Colonization Company, which received $100,000 from its hands and brought out 35 settlers to Canada for that sum; to the purchase of the Hotel Scribe in Paris at a cost of $2,700,000; to the $2,000,000 expenditure for a club-house for the Canadian High Commissioner in London and to the $10,000 paid last year alone to W. T. R. Preston, immigration agent for the Dominion in the Old Country.

Mr. Sutherland refreshed the minds of his hearers as to the election scandal which surrounded the operations of Mr. W. T. R. Preston in Western Ontario in 1898 and 1899, where, in a certain constituency, under his management, more votes were polled than there were names on the lists. "It is men of this calibre who have brought shame and reproach to the Liberal party," he said, and referred to Mr. Preston's activities as immigration agent in the Old Country as being partially connected with a desire to send settlers of the right political stripe out to the Dominion. He thought that if Rt. Hon. Mr. Fielding were at the helm of Parliamentary affairs, such practices would not be so common, and went on to stamp as Governmental propaganda the allusions to the leader of the Opposition, Rt. Hon. Mr. Meighen, as a confirmed pessimist, as an effort to destroy confidence of the Conservatives in their leader. That the root of the movement against Mr. Meighen should have its headquarters in Montreal was significant, he thought, of the desire of powers inimical to the Conservatives in that city to undermine his influence. He likened this movement to the campaign being made against Sir Adam Beck, and characterized Mr. Sinclair's demand that the Settel charges should be investigated fully as an evidence that the Liberal party had fallen on evil days when it was obliged to resort to such tactics.

He concluded with a reference to the assertion by the Government that Mr. Murdock had been triumphantly vindicated in the results of the West Hastings by-election, and wondered at the undue haste manifested by the Minister of Labor on the occasion when he withdrew his money from the Home Bank on a certain noon and sent his stenographer down to another banking institution to deposit the amount in her own name.

Explanation of Tariff.

Mr. McNicol was then introduced by Mr. McElderry as a man whose energy and ability as head of the Liberal-Conservative Association of Ontario and of the Dominion had done much to make this organization a force in Canadian politics.

Mr. McNicol's address was forceful and compelling He explained in clear style the meaning of the tariff, saying that it was simply a tax on imports from any other country. The policy of the Conservative party with regard to this question was to place this tariff or customs tax on any goods coming into Canada that might be manufactured in the Dominion, while the policy of the Liberal party was to allow these goods to come in free, irrespective of consideration as to whether they could be made here or not. "Between the two parties the issue is clear

The Conservative party's policy encourages industry and protects labour."

Mr. McNicol went on to compare the high costs of manufacture in Canada with those of other countries, pointing out the irreducible expenditures encountered in a colder climate, where the building of manufacturing establishments was perforce of a much more expensive type, to withstand the more inclement weather. Steel and glass and galvanized iron might be sufficient for the building of a factory in St. Louis but Canada required buildings of steel and brick. Multiple production in factories was impossible in this country also, because of the lack of the enormous population to which the American manufacturer could cater to.

Farmers on this side had to procure two methods of transportation for their goods the sleigh and the wheeled vehicle, against the one required in the Southern States, for instance, where barns were also unnecessary for the storage of produce.

High Imposts.

A farmer sending his hay into the American states was compelled to pay a tax of $4 a ton on it. American farmers exporting to this side paid only $2 a ton. Onions exported to the States from Canada were liable to a tax of $1.25 on the bushel. The American farmer could send his onions in here at a tax of 25 cents on the bushel. This was why farmers in Toronto recently asked for a levy of ten per cent on fruits and small vegetables from the other side

The Canadian workman's standard of living, declared the speaker, was, with the possible exception of the United States, the highest in the world. To maintain this, a higher wage must be paid the working man and working woman of the Dominion. Against a weekly average wage to the Canadian worker of $30, was placed the average weekly wage of the worker in England; $17.80, the worker in France, $8.70; and the worker in Japan, $6.40.

"How can the Canadian manufacturer pay wages of such a high rate as compared with other countries, and compete with these countries without a tariff?"

The policy of the King administration was blamed for the closing of 135 factories which the speaker claimed had been obliged to suspend operation on account of its free trade activities, and to the door of the Government was also laid the cutting-down of the staff in many of the big establishments Mr. McNicol made a plea for the higher tariff policy of the Conservative party as means of restoring prosperity to the land, setting the wheels of industry humming and bringing back to Canada many of those who had gone to the other hide in search of more prosperous conditions. He ended with a reference to the recent defeat of the Conservatives in West Hastings as being small in comparison with similar defeats suffered of late by the Liberal party in various strong constituencies, and asked his audience to fight hard at the next election "to trim the member for West Peterboro to a frazzle and elect a Tory in his place."

W. H. Bradburn, M.P.P. congratulated the two previous speakers on their addresses and commented briefly on his presence at a meeting in Toronto recently in connection with the development of the St. Lawrence Waterways. At this meeting, the appearance of Sir Adam Beck was hailed with enthusiasm that indicated the feeling of the gathering toward the leader and their conviction that the great Hydro development is safe in his hands as long as he stays there.

"There are two hundred and fifty million dollars invested in that development and there are institutions with headquarters in Montreal who would like to kill that great institution, if possible. But there are no private interests in this country who will ever take away from the municipalities that great power development. Here in Peterboro we have a private institution that would like to kill public ownership, if possible." Mr. Bradburn went on to eulogize the administration of provincial affairs as carried on by the Premier, G. Howard Ferguson.

A vote of confidence in Mr. Ferguson and an encomium on his ability "in bringing order out of chaos" was eloquently voiced by Mrs. H. T. Fallis of North Monaghan, president of the Women's Liberal-Conservative Association, and Dr. J. R. Fraser of Lakefield read a similar tribute and expression of loyalty in the Leader of the Opposition that Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen

SETTELL CLAIMS SUM OF $15,800

Defending Himself in Hydro Case—Says He Is "Fed Up."

HAMILTON, Dec. 4.—(Canadian Press).—Declaring that he was "fed up", E. C. Settell, former secretary to Sir Adam Beck, decided to take from Hydro Commission sum equal to $15 per week with interest at six per cent for all time he was employed, according to story told by him in witness box in Judge Evans court to-day, when he appeared in his own defence on a charge of theft of $20,925 from the Bank of Commerce when he cashed cheque bearing hydro official's signatures.

In response to questions asked by his counsel, R H. Greer, accused said he had joined the hydro twenty years ago and shortly after becoming associated with the organization had become infatuated with Sir Adam Beck's vision of power development. He was expected to use his friendships to aid hydro. His salary at first was $65 a month and later $400. During that period he drew $1200, from his father's estate and $3,200 from investments.

Appetite for liquor grew on him, Settell continued. He had to use it continually in order to do his work. At the time of his arrest he was drinking day and night.

"Thank God, since my arrest I have learned to do without it," continued Settell.

Regarding the $20,925 cheque he declared he had presented this to Sir Adam Beck and W W. Pope and they had signed it without questioning him. It was marked as payment for right-of-way.

The prisoner said he had succeeded in collecting from the Commission only about five per cent of the money he had spent on liquor.

FRANCE TO PAY DEBT.

French Arranging to Pay Off Debt With United States.

LONDON, Dec. 4.— (Canadian Press.)—Report that France has begun negotiations for funding her debt to the United States has aroused a stir in London and local comment reveals the expectation that if France arranges to pay the United States she will also arrange to pay Britain. Further contended that if the United States allows France exceptional terms, Britain would be justified in looking for a revision of her own funding arrangements with the United States.

PAID TRIBUTE TO DEPUTY SPEAKER

Mr. G. N. Gordon Referred to in Speech by Premier King in Montreal.

MONTREAL, Dec. 4.—With the victories of West Hastings and St. Antoine still fresh in their memories, the Liberals of this Province, with both Federal and Provincial members and organizers, at a notable banquet in the Windsor Hotel last night, gave tumultuous acclaim to Hon. Arthur Cardin, Minister of Marine and Fisheries in the Dominion Cabinet, who is credited with the triumph for W. J. Hushion in St. Antoine on Sept. 2 last, and also to Charles E. Hanna, the winner in West Hastings.

Premier King, referring to the St. Antoine victory, declared that it had set the seal of sure success upon the principles and policies of our party. "We were thrown a challenge. It was not of our occasioning. It was the more significant in that it came at the end of a long debate in the House of Commons and at the very moment at which the vote on the Budget was to be recorded; the more significant in that it came most unexpectedly from our own side of the House." He paid a high tribute to Mr. Cardin for his work in that contest.

Tribute to Deputy Speaker

After refering to West Hastings and St Antoine, Premier King turned to another by-election which was a test applied by the Conservatives to their own strength in most favorable ridings—that was West Peterboro'. "There, as you will recall in 1920 the by-election was occasioned through the resignation of the sitting member, Mr. Hampden Burnham. Like St. Antoine and West Hastings, it was to give the people a chance to express their opinion in a popular appeal. I recall very well at the time the 'men of little faith' who doubted the wisdom of contesting the seat, who feared for the waste of money, energy and time involved, and who above all else, feared the possibility of defeat. Fortunately, better and more optimistic counsels prevailed. The challenge was accepted, the constituency was searched for the best of all candidates. He was found and fortunately secured, and, with high purpose, the contest was entered upon, fought and won, and the party has held West Peterboro' ever since.

"Not only did the party gain an invaluable member in the person of Mr. Gordon, but the House of Commons gained a very distinguished Deputy Speaker. How much of the victory in West Hastings was due to the insistence of Mr. Gordon on a fight, to his generalship and that of the Hon. T. A. Low, Minister of Trade and Commerce, they will have to work out between themselves. I know that Mr. Hanna, and the devoted and loyal workers by whom he is surrounded, will be the first to say that to these two gentlemen and those associated with them, the party owes a very special debt of gratitude for the proportions which the victory assumed.

HANKOW, China, Dec. 4.—(Canadian Press.)—Followers of General Wu Pei Fu, formerly military commander of Peking Government, are reported to have blown up Hankow-Peking railway bridge over the Yellow river, said to be the longest bridge in China.

It is reported that General Wu Pei-Fu, former military commander of the Peking government, is in flight from his old headquarters in Honan Province. The flight is attributed to the receipt of an ultimatum from the Shensi Provincial commander who is advancing against him, followed by mutiny of his own bodyguard.

CREAT RECEPTION GIVEN AMBASSADOR

Procession Cut in Two When Demonstration of Communists Began to Look Dangerous.

PARIS, Dec. 4. — (Canadian Press).—French extremists seized, upon the arrival in Paris to-day of Leonid Krassin, Soviet Ambassador to France, as the occasion for inaugurating intensified campaign for Communism in this country. The demonstrators started out by giving the Moscow representative such a reception as no other Ambassador ever received in Paris, and followed it up immediately with the announcement that "the world revolution reached Paris" and that "the French revolutionists will now show they are able to do quite as well as their Russian comrades." The police, who had allowed the manifestation to proceed without interference up to that point, intervened after the Communist deputy, Jacques Doriot, had hurled these words from the balcony of the Communists' headquarters to a column of some 30,000 enthusiasts who were following Krassin's motor car from the railway station to the Embassy. They cut the procession in two and ended the demonstration which had begun to take on a threatening aspect.

CHARGED WITH ARSON.

Mrs. Bessie Tate Charged With Attempting to Burn C.P.R. Station.

SUDBURY, Dec. 4. — (Canadian Press). — Mrs. Bessie Tate, young farmer's wife, of Hagar, was committed for trial yesterday on two charges of attempted arson, one of attempting to burn the C.P.R. Station at Hagar and another of attempting to burn the house and barn of her own parents.

Contrary to expectations, the charge of placing obstacles on railway tracks was not preferred. Crown Prosecutor Williams, the C.P.R. solicitor, suggested that the accused was not mentally right and should be committed to an institution. The Magistrate concurred in this view, but sent the prisoner for trial before a judge and jury.

TERRIBLE ORDEAL OF BRAVE MINER

Fingers Cut Off With Chisel to Effect Escape

ROOF CAVED IN

Perilous Position of Rescuers Who Operated with Wood Chisel

Francis McNally, a miner, who had three of his fingers amputated with a chisel so that he could be rescued from the mine described the experience to a reporter in Sunderland Royal Infirmary.

On October 26, McNally and John Place, both "stone men," were at work in Burton Colliery when there was a fall of earth and stones. Both men were completely buried. Two deputy foremen, Vincent Elwick and George Wilson, at once went to the rescue of their comrades.

To reach the men they had to dig a hole, eighteen inches by fifteen inches in diameter. They then stripped themselves of all their clothing and crawled through the hole. As they did so stones clattered down about their heads, placing them in danger. They succeeded in reaching Place, and after half an hour's work he was taken out little the worse for his adventure.

ROOF COLLAPSING.

The roof was then falling in and amid a continuous noise of falling stones, Elwick and Wilson crawled back through the hole and eventually found McNally lying in a crouched and painful position on his right elbow, one of his hands having become jammed between a tub and a large broken bank of timber.

It was impossible to release him, and the men strove desperately to cut away the timber with a hammer and chisel. Meanwhile their position became every minute more perilous owing to the falling of the roof.

The two rescuers then saw that it would be suicidal to stay any longer, and suggested as a last resource that McNally should allow them to cut away his imprisoned fingers. "Have one more try," he said.

They tried again but failed.

"I then realized," said McNally, "that if they were to save me and get themselves but before the roof finally collapsed, I would have to have my fingers off, and so I told them to start away.

"HAMMERED OFF."

"Elwick tied a handkerchief round my wrist and elbow. I was fully conscious of everything all the time. They got the chisel and tried to cut one of the fingers, but there was not enough room to work the hammer properly and the chisel was blunt. We had to wait until a wood chisel was passed down to us through the hole. They then hammered off three of the fingers of my hand. When they got me free I had to crawl through the hole on my stomach and to draw myself up through the opening.

"Once I reached the other side, my chums pulled me through, and I was put on a stretcher, on which I was taken to the pithead and then to the infirmary. I remember everything, for I never lost consciousness. To Elwick and Wilson I owe the fact that I am alive today, and I cannot find words to express my feelings for their brave conduct. They risked their lives for me. My hand is getting better and I am able to walk about again."

As a matter of fact, McNally, who is more than fifty years of age, is still weak.

How near McNally and his two rescuers were to death is shown by the fact that within ten minutes of their being taken out of the hole, another large fall occurred, completely blocking up the only exit.

Forbidden to Fish In River Stanley Draws Hot Protest

At a meeting of rod fishermen on the Slaney, held at Clohamon, Enniscorthy, strong protests were made against the regulations preventing "free" fishing. Licensed rodmen, many of whom owned land on the river banks, were prohibited from fishing, while "Englishmen and Scotchmen could come and go as they wished."

Ald. Corish, T.D., said the Labor Party will endeavor to have the present obnoxious fishing laws amended. The dukes and earls and lords of England, he said, have no right to control the river, while poor men, who have licenses, are prohibited.

M. Toole, Enniscorthy, who presided, said the Slaney was controlled by landlordism from Tullow to Enniscorthy. Thirty or forty licensed rodmen were prohibited from fishing along the river from Bunclody to Enniscorthy.

A similar meeting was held at Oylegate.

"STAGE NAMES" FOR OFFICE WORKERS

The stage of long ago exploded the "What's-in-a-name" fallacy, Miss Florrie Brown, of Streatham, found that, re-christened as Sonia Litzkov, of Nijni Novgorod, she was more effective.

The stage practice has spread, and large numbers of business girls are adopting professional names for office hours only.

"My real name," said one, "is of the 'Daisy Smith' order—no name to conjure with in modern commerce. My assumed one—a Scotch-American hybrid—suits myself and my work better, and my employer thinks me the living proof of his theory of the commercial superiority of the Scot and the Yank."

Primitive Instinct Defence Plea In Case Of Wounding

Sentence of 18 months' hard labor was passed on John Thomas Cox, independent, of Foston, Leicestershire, at Derby, for wounding Cyril Charles Parkinson, farmer, of Scropton, Derbyshire.

It was stated that because of Mrs. Parkinson's visits to Cox, whose housekeeper she had previously been, Mr. Parkinson challenged Cox to "come and have it out." In the course of a quarrel Cox threw pepper in Mr. Parkinson's face, felled him with a stick, and tried to gouge his eyes out.

For the defence Sir Henry Maddoks, K.C., urged that it was the case of a display of the primitive instincts of two men fighting for a woman.

PIEBALD PONY AS CURE FOR COUGH

Old Wives' Health Tales are Killed by Lecturer

Dr. Isaac Fletcher, of Workington, lecturing at Wigton, in Cumberland, killed a few of the "old wives' tales" that are believed in remote villages. He said that it was all wrong to suppose:

That miners refused to wash their backs on account of the weakening effect of water;

That passing a child three times round the legs of a piebald pony was an infallible cure for whooping cough;

That consumption could be cured by eating raw snails;

That it was impossible for a person to die while lying on a feather bed.

That bones became more brittle in frosty weather.

PEER'S HEIR DEAD IN THE OKANAGAN

Coutts Marjoribanks, last surviving son of the first Lord Tweedmouth, heir-presumptive to the title and uncle of the present peer, has died at the age of 64 at Vernon, British Columbia, where he lived for many years.

The new heir-presumptive is Mr. Edward Marjoribanks, son of the late Mr. Archibald Marjoribanks. His step-father is Sir Douglas Hogg, the Attorney-General, to whom Mrs. A. Marjoribanks was married in 1905.

SPIKED GLOVE IS CURIOUS WEAPON

Retired Gentleman Showed Aggressive Front to Policeman

A man named George Lindsay Burge (67), who described himself as "a retired gentleman," and was charged with being a suspected person and assaulting a constable, was remanded by the Willesden magistrate for medical examination owing to his strange behavior in the dock.

Constable Maxted said that he saw Burge enter some gardens. He had a bag, and when he asked him what he was doing he did not reply, but "jabbed" at him with his gloved hand, knocking a button off his tunic. He examined the glove and found that it had a spike fastened to it. The man also had a spiked cane.

Burge, who wore a frock-coat, kid gloves, and broken boots, told the magistrate that he had £20 on him, and it made him suspicious when a policeman spoke to him.

The officer said it was quite true that Burge had £20 on him. The notes were fastened to the lining of his trousers with safety pins.

ENGLISHMEN MUST KNOW THE LAW

"One of the privileges of an Englishman is that he has got to know the law, whether he is a lawyer or not. Very few lawyers do."

This remark was made by Mr. Rooth at Lambeth during the hearing of a case in which a man was charged with "stealing by finding" a sponge value 6s. 9d.

The Magistrate asked Detective-sergeant Christy, who gave evidence of arrest, if the man said anything about the law of finding.

The Detective—He pleaded ignorance, and I explained it to him.

Defendant. — I plead ignorance of the law.

Mr. Rooth.—That is no defence in this country. We are supposed to know all the common law and all the statute law. I can assure you that the statutes of this country would cover the whole of the walls of this court. Every child who is born into the world is supposed to know them and know them by heart.

In discharging the man Mr. Rooth said it could not be too widely known that if a man found anything in the street he must take reasonable steps to find the owner.

WOMAN, WITH BUTLER, COOK AND SECRETARY, SENDS PLEA OF POVERTY

A woman should have appeared on a judgment summons for £22 at Westminster County Court but a young man attended on her behalf and said she could only pay £1 a month.

In answer to Judge Sir Alfred Tobin he said he was the woman's private secretary at 25s. a week, with board and lodging.

The Judge: She must have means to pay if she can afford the luxury of a private secretary. I have not a secretary.

The secretary said the woman's servants included a cook and butler.

The Judge: I shall not interfere. The law must take its course.

His racehorses, brood mares, stable effects at his racing stables, and one-half of his stock of hay, straw and fodder, to his son Cecil.

William Bourke Cockran, one of the leading New York lawyers, and for many years a representative of New York State in the American Congress, left all of his property to his wife absolutely, but had she not survived him he had made numerous bequests to Catholic and other charities and to employes. In view of his eminence as a lawyer, the following provision in his will is of interest:—

In view of the ruinous consequences of litigation to all concerned in the case of wills, any heir who should directly or indirectly oppose probate, or take any proceedings to impeach the validity of the will, should thereby be barred all participation in his property.

Mr. Cockran was a very wealthy man, and practically all of his property was in the United States, but a grant has had to be taken out in London in respect of English property valued at £237.

Mr. Percy Braby, of Golders Green, and Arundel street, Strand, W.C., solicitor, left £21,195. He stated that he especially desired that his funeral should be conducted in the simplest, least expensive and most cheerful manner possible; that his remains should be cremated and the ashes scattered without any ceremony, and that no black clothes should be worn at any time in token of conventional mourning for him.

WATER-PIPE CLIMB BY CAT BURGLAR

Jewellery and clothing valued at about £300 were stolen from a third-floor bedroom at the Savoy Hotel, Strand, occupied by an American visitor. The American left his room about 8 p.m. and returned after midnight.

It is believed that the burglar climbed up a water-pipe which runs alongside the window. To reach the balcony from the pipe he had to swing himself sideways three feet. In the event of the slightest slip or miscalculation there was nothing to stop a fall to the ground.

He packed a number of articles in a suit-case, climbed out of the window on to the balcony, and let the suit-case fall on to the fire-escape. He then dropped from the balcony to the fire-escape, lifted the suit-case, and walked away.

FISH SEX MYSTERY IN LONDON ZOO

Mother 'Platy' Changes to a Boy—Quaint Ways of Nature

A strange fish was introduced to the Fellows of the Zoological Society at a scientific meeting by E. G. Boulenger, director of the aquarium at the London Zoological Gardens.

After spending many weeks as a kind and considerate mother, "she" had changed into a boy, and, curously enough, many of "her" sisters had been known to go through the same transfiguration.

"She" belongs to a variety of the Mexican "sword-tail" fish and is known as a "golden platy"—an abbreviation of a daunting scientific name.

It is usually the male sword-tails only which wear swords—long sabre-like projections at the lower end of the tail. The "lady" in question had developed a fine sword and had undergone other changes which had turned her into a "boy," or immature male. It is not yet established that the sword-tail fish can change completely from a mother into a father.

It is curious that the female fish of this species always outnumber the males, and one cannot resist the temptation to ask if Nature is trying to adjust the balance of sexes in a hurry.

CROWD OF WOMEN ATTEND ST. PAUL'S

Nearly 3,000 women, representatives of every profession and calling in which the female sex are engaged, attended a service at St. Paul's Cathedral.

Thanks were given for the opportunities for training, work and service opened to women in the last 50 years.

The service was held in connection with the jubilee celebrations of the London (Royal Free Hospital) School of Medicine for Women.

The Bishop of London preached the sermon, and the London Symphony Orchestra took part in the musical portion of the service.

An evening party was held at the school afterwards, at which 1,200 guests were entertained.

The priest gave the security and the undertaking.

Sir John later told a reporter that he had no idea he was jeopardizing his amateur status by taking part in the contest referred to.

JUDGES CLOCKED IN BRITAIN NOW

When a barrister suggested to Judge Cluer in the Shoreditch County Court, that his case should stand over as there was no possibility of reaching it until a late hour, the Judge replied:

"I am not going to adjourn any cases. I am going to finish my list: that is what I am here for. So we shall be here until 11 p.m. We have to record, now, how many seconds, minutes and hours we are sitting at the court for some reason, so it will make an excellent record."

EX-M.P. DIES IN DIRE POVERTY

Touching Story Told by Landlady of Irishman's End

LONELY FIGURE

Formerly Sat for Tipperary as Nationalist—Age 69

How a former Irish M.P. and well-known Anglo-Australian journalist died friendless and in poverty in London, at the age of 69, was revealed at an inquest at St. Pancras on Mr. James Francis Hogan. He represented Tipperary as a Nationalist in Parliament from 1895 to 1900.

Mrs. Jenny, who keeps a boarding-house in Doughty street, told a reporter that Mr. Hogan had lived in her house for about a year and it was only at the inquest that she learned he had been an M.P.

"He came to me about a year ago in rags," she said, "having been refused admittance elsewhere. He looked like a tramp and I did not want to take him in, but he was such an object of pity that I had not the heart to turn him away.

NEVER RECEIVED A LETTER.

"He was a very reserved man. Apart from wishing me 'Good morning' or 'Good night,' he never spoke to anyone in this house. He had no friends and did not receive a single letter. Where the little money he had came from I do not know, but it was stated at the inquest that he had an account with the Union Bank of Australia.

"He paid $3.75 a week for a room without meals. It was all he could afford, he told me. He never had a fire.

"I have never known him to have a pair of socks or even laces for his boots, and his clothes were in rags. He was a terrible object to look at, and several boarders left my house in account of him. But it would have been unchristian to turn him out.

"A mystery about him I could never fathom was that he had a brown paper parcel containing a pair of trousers and woollen underclothing, all in good condition, yet in all the time he was with me he never changed his rags for these garments.

"Poor though he was he always paid me promptly. Where he had his meals I do not know. He frequented the museums a good deal I believe. He was a thorough gentleman.

"About a week ago I noticed a change in him, and at nights he had a cough. I don't think he could afford to see a doctor.

"I am a Spiritualist, and I had a presentiment that something was going to happen to Mr. Hogan. I could not get over this feeling, and early in Sunday morning I went to his room in my dressing gown.

"His door was locked, but through the keyhole I could see his bedclothes disarranged. I sent for the police, who forced the door and found Mr. Hogan dead."

SOCIALISTS' ONLY WOMAN MEMBER

Miss Wilkinson, Who Won Middlesborough, is Fiery Lass

Miss Ellen Wilkinson, who won Middlesbrough East from the Liberals, is a vivacious little woman in the twenties, with a mobile countenance, fresh complexion, large brown eyes, and a mass of red hair. She is only about five feet in height, but has any amount of pluck and pugnacity.

She is witty, and men of some mental calibre have been made to look foolish by her power of repartee. She is perhaps the most effective woman platform speaker in the Socialist movement.

She is so short that she often stands on a chair so that the audience may see her. In her political fights her stature, allied with her earnestness and eloquence, has been, in fact, an asset.

It has endeared her to the people, who have referred to her as "the little lass." She has a capacity for improvising telling phrases, and should make her mark in the House of Commons, where she will be the only woman Socialist.

She is one of the organizers of the National Union of Distributive and Allied Workers, whose headquarters are in Manchester, and for years has taken a keen interest in politics and economics. She is an M.A. of Manchester University.

DICK WHITTINGDON SEAL IS FOUND

A legal document bearing what is believed to be the seal of Dick Whittington, the famous Lord Mayor of London, has been discovered among a bundle of old deeds by H. R. Moulton, a London expert in parchments. In the centre of the seal is a bust of a young man, encircling which is the name "Ricardi Whityngton," and the date 1402. An expert of the Public Records Office said that he was confident the seal was genuine, and so far as he knew, unique. It must have been the seal used by Whittington before he was knighted and received armorial bearings. He was made Lord Mayor first in 1397."

A. H. Thomas, Keeper of the Archives of the City of London, said the portrait on the seal was possibly that of some saint favored by Whittington, as he did not think it was a picture of him.

ACCIDENTS DUE TO SELFISH DRIVERS

Judge Parry, at Lambeth County Court, in dealing with a case where two vehicles collided in the street, said he had always to find out in these cases who was the selfish driver.

He found that the selfish driver relied on the fact that he could frighten people on to the pavement and make other drivers give way for him. He claimed the road, and saw that he got it whatever it cost other people, caring nothing about what they might suffer. He was "always responsible for street accidents, and of him they had to be aware.

Admiral Dead

Admiral Sir Wm. Alison Dyke Acland, retired, who died in London, Eng., recently, had a long and distinguished career in the British Navy, and held many important posts.

SCOTTISH UNION BANS ALL BLACKS

Rugby Enthusiasts in Land of Heather Wax Indignant

Scottish Rugby enthusiasts are indignant over the final decision of the Scottish Football Union rejecting the proposal for a match with the All Blacks.

The English Union arranged the tour without the sanction of the International Board, and because of that the Scottish Union declines to recognize the tour. Their quarrel is with the English Union, not with the New Zealanders.

Indignation in Scotland is the more bitter because of the fact that more than half of the New Zealand team claim Scottish descent, and have come from the other side of the world to find themselves shut out officially from the land of their fathers.

If the visit could have been arranged, Sir William Sleigh, the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, was prepared to offer the players a civic reception. Nothing, however, will be done, because the Scottish Football Union is the most autocratic body in British sport organization. Its decisions, however unpopular, are always obeyed.

The matter, however, is not yet finished, and offers have been made to arrange a match in Scotland between the All Blacks and an English side.

LONDON CHURCH TURNED INTO HOME

One of London's most remarkable houses is The Belfry, West Halkin street, W., which was formerly a Presbyterian church. The owner, Mrs. Oakley Maund, has converted the premises into a home, while retaining many of its ecclesiastical characteristics.

Mrs. Maund has had a set of bells installed in the belfry, and has retained the gallery, which is a feature of all Non-conformist churches, and has built an organ in it.

The Rev. W. Kennedy Williamson, the former pastor of the church, told a Daily Mail reporter that in June, 1922 the lease fell in. "The Duke of Westminster then quadrupled the ground rent, and the church felt that they could not continue in occupation."

KEEPING FIT AT SEVENTY-THREE

Lord Leverhulme Fits Up Gymnasium in Palatial Yacht

Lord Leverhulme, who is seventy-three years of age, has had a magnificently equipped gymnasium, costing £1,000, installed for his personal use in the steam yacht Albion, which he has chartered for a five months' cruise.

The vessel sailed from Southampton for Lagos, British West Africa, where Lord Leverhulme will join her for a tour of the coast to inspect his interests.

A fully qualified instructor has been appointed to take charge of the gymnasium and supervise Lord Leverhulmes' daily exercises.

When Lord Leverhulme, who is remarkably active for his age, last crossed the Atlantic in the Majestic, he was frequently in the gymnasium at 5 a.m. The equipment so pleased him that he decided to have one for himself.

So the Albion will have mechanical horses, bicycles, and boats, and an apparatus for camel riding.

Lord Leverhulme is at present in West Africa.

INCOME-TAX HONESTY.

"If all persons made true returns for the purpose of income tax, including those with small incomes as well as those with large incomes, there might be some hope of the present rate of income tax being reduced," said Mr. Justice Avory in addressing Liverpool Assizes grand jury.

SCARLET AND GOLD AT CITY BANQUET

How the New Cabinet Took Turtle Soup With Mayor

THE JUDGES PASS

Exacting Wine List Feature of Historic Event

The new Conservative Cabinet went to the Guildhall to eat turtle soup with the City fathers and to see London's new Lord Mayor, Sir Alfred Louis Bower, take his seat under the glittering gold plate while the trumpeters blew their fanfare.

It was the Cabinet's first public appearance, and the solemn old Guildhall, disguised as something between a ballroom and a conservatory, was determined to give the new Government the same hearty welcome it gives to kings and princes.

Ten pretty maids of honor, all in white, holding red and white bouquets, formed a background in the throne room. The Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress stood on their scarlet carpet and welcomed soldiers, sailors, bishops, peers, knights, till the little railed off pen of prominence to their right became pleasantly full, writes H. V. H. in the London Daily Express.

RED SKULL CAP.

Lovely women, men in scarlet, men in blue the tinkle of spurs and the clank of sword scabbards. So it went on for a good hour. Here as cardinal in flowing robes, a red skull cap on his head; there a peer in velvet, sword at hip.

And the ten white maids of honor whispered together at this one and that, very excited, flushed, and very happy.

Suddenly the aldermen, councillors, and their wives became excited. They stood up and applauded, drowning the string band.

"Winston Churchill! Chancellor of the Exchequer!" they whispered.

Mr. Churchill, who should always wear uniform, came slowly up the room in the uniform of an Elder Brother of Trinity House, a fine, showy uniform that looks as though an admiral had borrowed a general's cuffs. He smiled. The Lord Mayor smiled. The ten white maids smiled. All the famous people in the scarlet enclosure smiled.

Mr. Austen Chamberlain, in neat Privy Councillor's uniform, came quickly over the floor, his immovable monocle fixed on the Lord Mayor. Lord Birkenhead, Sir Douglas Haig, Lord Eustace Percy, and Sir Laming Worthington-Evans followed quickly.

TRUMPETERS.

Then there sounded that flourish of trumpets which announces the very great. Slowly the trumpeters marched up the room in their gold coats and their big riding boots, and behind them came the judges in scarlet and ermine.

"The Lord Chief Justice of England!"

An attendant stepped out and hitched Lord Hewart's train to his wrist, and the Lord Chief mounted the dais. One by one, and very solemn, the clean shaven judges passed by.

Mr. Baldwin, once more Prime Minister, walked up without his smile. He looked grave in his dull Privy Councillor's dress and he preserved his gravity till he joined the little group where Mr. Churchill, still smiling, grasped him by the hand.

By this time the turtle soup was ready in the great hall. Two chiefs on each side of the door, mounted in pulpits, were carving mighty barons of beef. The exacting wine lists of a Vintner Lord Mayor's banquet were on the table, so, once more to the sound of trumpets, the famous guests were paired off and marched in procession to the hall.

All except Mr. Kellogg, the American Ambassador, for whom no lady was forthcoming. He went in alone, a democratic figure in evening dress, who stood out remarkably amid the gold lace of Spain and the magnificence of Japan.

BRITAIN GETS VALUABLE ORDER

The Metropolitan-Vickers Electrical Company, Ltd., of Trafford Park, Manchester, have secured a contract for the electrical equipment for the Sydney, New South Wales, Suburban Railway's electrification.

The order amounts to nearly $2,500,000. The company won it in spite of keen competition from America and other quarters.

The work includes the equipment of 150 motor coaches and 150 trailer-coaches with two 350-h.p. 1,500-volts motors, with electro-pneumatic control gear.

TOOK HAND GRENADE FOR DOLLY STICK

A terrific explosion that blew out the windows and made a hole through the wall of the room occurred while Mr. and Mrs. Bryant, of Sebastopol-road, Aldershot, were seated in their kitchen.

Mr. Bryant, a council employee, had picked up what he believed to be a "dolly stick" and given it to his wife.

The "dolly stick" was placed in a corner near the kitchen range, and there it remained for a fortnight—until it exploded!

What Mr. Bryant took for a "dolly stick" has been found to be a hand-grenade bomb.

Some bedding in the next room caught fire after the explosion, and the brigade had to be called. Mr. and Mrs. Bryant escaped injury.

BAILIE'S NOSE PULLED IN UPROARIOUS SCENE AT GLASGOW MEETING

A scene occurred at a meeting of Glasgow Corporation, when Tom Kerr, one of the councillors, twisted the nose of Bailie James Miller. Bailie Miller was seen to wipe blood from his face.

On account of the excitement in the Chamber, the Lord Provost adjourned the meeting for 15 minutes.

Mr. Kerr was the Labor candidate for Kelvingrove at the General Election. The incident arose through a difference between the Socialist and the Moderate members regarding the representations of the parties on committees.

Following an altercation, Councillor Kerr threw his papers at Bailie Miller, and said that he had a good mind to wring his neck.

A great commotion arose, and in the midst of it Mr. Kerr, going up to Bailie Miller, said in a loud voice, "Come outside and settle it."

Bailie Miller took no notice, and Mr. Kerr caught the Bailie by the nose and gave it a severe twist.

VANCE HONORS DIVIDE FANS

Hornsby and Frisch Do Not Get Share of Credit From Scribes.

CHICAGO, December 4. — Disappointment among the fans followed the announcement of the most valuable player in the National league—Dazzy Vance, the Brooklyn pitcher—who was selected by a committee composed of baseball writers, is being generally expressed here.

Vance received 74 points, a total of 12 more than Rogers Hornsby of the St. Louis Cardinals, who was in turn followed by Frankie Frisch of the Giants.

It was thought by many that Rogers Hornsby should have been the one to be awarded the $1000 prize.

Many lovers of the game do not deny that Dazzy Vance was a tremendous help to Manager Robinson, but they are of the opinion that in the light of all the facts the honor should have fallen upon the greatest hitter of all time. St. Louis followers of the national pastime, especially, show disapproval of the result of the vote cast by the committee, according to word received from that city.

Manager Branch Rickey of the Cardinals, according to the Associated Press despath, is indignant at the selection of the Brooklyn hurler. He contends Hornsby was more valuable to his team last season than Dazzy was to his club.

Kept Club out of Cellar.

"If it had not been for Rogers the Cardinals would not have finished as high in the standing as they did" says Rickey. "It was almost entirely his terrific and timely hitting and his consistent playing at the keystone corner that kept us out of the cellar. When Hornsby fell into a batting slump look what happened to the club! It gradually lost its hold on the sixth place and was heading for oblivion.

"The players were saved the humiliation of finishing at the bottom of the league by Rogers. He walloped the ball for a percentage of only .423, leading both major circuits by a wide margin."

There are others who believe that Hornsby should have been the recipient of the diploma. Each city in the league has fans who received the announcement of Vance's appointment without any great display of enthusiasm. They were disappointed.

Considered Team, Not Player.

The more ardent boosters of the St. Louis second baseman argue the members of the committee placed too much consideration in the fact that Brooklyn finished in the second place at the close of the season and the Cardinals in sixth. The final standing of the clubs, they contend, should not have been given much thought as it is the player selected that counts, and not the final result of the standing of the team.

Vance, the player selected, won 28 games in the National league last season. He only lost six contests, four to eastern representatives and two to teams from the west. The Pirates and Cubs administered defeats to Dazzy in the last two weeks in Brooklyn.

THE ORIGINAL MR. CASEY

The Man Who Inspired Baseball's Most Famous Poem Now a Dog Protector in Syracuse.

Here's the original "Casey at the Bat," the Babe Ruth of a bygone period whose historic strikeout plunged all Mudville into stygian gloom. The gentleman's name is O. Robinson Casey. At present he is in charge of the S. P. C. A. headquarters in Syracuse. Some 40 years ago he was the star batsman of the Detroit Nationals. His mighty slugging inspired Trayer's famous verse, "Casey at the Bat."

TWO BALL PLAYERS EQUAL AN AIRPLANE

Omaha Club Man Trades Pitcher and Catcher for a Flying Machine.

HARTFORD, Dec. 4.—An innovation in baseball trades was made at the National Association meeting here Tuesday when Barney Burch, president of the Omaha Western League club traded a pitcher and a catcher to Edward J. Tracy, president of the St. Joseph, Mo., club in exchange for an airplane.

The ideal is a legal baseball transaction involving Pitcher R. Luebbe and Catcher F. J. Wilder, who will report to the St. Joseph club at the start of the 1925 season.

Under the rules of the National Association, two per cent of the purchase price of the player must go into the treasury of the association and Western League magnates were perturbed as to how this might be handled.

However, Burch solved the problem by offering to give Secretary Farrell a ride from his home in Auburn, N.Y., to St. Joseph, Mo., and back in one day to take care of the 2 per cent.

ROCKNE IS CALLED 'FORD OF FOOTBALL'

Notre Dame Alumnus Makes Reference at Banquet in New York.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—Knute Rockne, referred to as "the Henry Ford of football," and Harry Stuhldreher, his "chief engineer," left for South Bend, Ind., Tuesday with plaudits of Notre Dame alumni ringing in their ears. The coach and the quarterback were the guests last night at a dinner given by Angus McDonald, comptroller of the Union Pacific railroad, a Notre Dame alumnus and himself a football player a quarter of century ago.

Small Student Body

McDonald, referring to Rockne as the "Henry Ford of football", explained that the coach had more than 400 students playing football on the various teams and varsity squads out of a total student body of 2,000.

Rockne said he never had a team in which the spirit of co-operation and team play was as well developed as in this year's varsity.

On Monday Rockne and his team will begin work for the Stanford game. He made it clear that Notre Dame would make no claims to any championship.

"Let the critics award the honors," he said. "Our job is to play football and when the schedule is completed our work is done."

There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M. "We noticed it as soon as we saw the notice of intention to marry, which was posted several weeks ago, according to Mexican requirements.

"We consulted a Mexican attorney here, who told us that the marriage would be illegal if the age was incorrectly stated, but found when we got here that the marriage was legal anyway."

Resuming her interrupted explanation, Mrs. Spicer asked:

"What difference does it make if my daughter's age was not correctly given? The public has been given to understand that she is a girl of 19, through motion picture publicity, and it was thought best to leave it that way for that reason.

"Why should the public worry about her personal affairs anyway? She and Charlie are happily married after a very romantic affair. There were business reasons for secrecy, that is all."

After which Mrs. Spicer and Mr Curry stepped into an automobile and disappeared rapidly in the direction of the Chaplin mansion.

SUCCESS OF HAROLD LLOYD IS BUILT ON CLEAN COMEDY THAT NEVER OFFENDS.

In a speech before the producers publicity and advertising men in Los Angeles not long ago, Will H. Hays made one of his most emphatic statements since becoming pilot of the motion picture industry.

"Filth must be banished from the screen. There is no place for it there any more than there is for it any place else. We have pledged our entire resources to maintain the motion picture on the highest moral and artistic standard and we intend absolutely to do it."

Pictures to be successful do not have to be loud or obscene, or appeal in any way to the baser emotions. The screen's greatest success has been built by a boy who has never resorted to that type of motion picture. In all the world there is to-day no bigger box office attraction than Harold Lloyd. Four years ago his art first began to be recognized by the American public. "A Sailor Made Man" established him as an artist of the highest degree. From then on his climb has been steady, and even sensational. Every picture has brought him new admirers, but never once has a single objection been found, even by the severest moralist, to anything that has ever appeared in his pictures. He proved convincingly that pictures can be kept clean and still be successful.

Now he comes to bat with what everyone who has seen it declares is another comedy knockout. This one is "Hot Water," showing to-day, Friday and Saturday at the Capitol Theatre, and while it is not quite as long as "Girl Shy" or "Why Worry" and other recent Lloyd attractions, it rates with his funniest pictures.

"Hot Water" is just what Lloyd set out to make—a funny picture. Its plot is just strong enough to hold together in continuity, the hilarious sequences and episodes. Unlike "Girl Shy" its story treatment is very light and the serious moments of the last Lloyd picture will not be found in "Hot Water." It is a story of "The First Year" type with three distinct laugh-factions.

Sam Taylor, John Gray, Tommy Gray and Tim Whelan wrote this story, which was directed by Forde Newmeyer and Taylor. In the cast are Jobyna Ralston, as leading lady; Josephine Crowell, the mother-in-law; Charles Stevenson, as the lazy brother-in-law, and Mickey McBan as the youngest troublemaker.

BY ACHMED ABDULLAH

The greatest physicians, sorcerers, faith healers, apothecaries, and leeches of Bagdad, Damascus, Constantinople and Cairo had been summoned to her bedside. Moses Maimonides, the eminent Jewish philosopher and savant, had made the long journey East from the Moorish University of Cordova, where he lectured, to add his skill and sagacity; from Wittelsbach, thanks to the good offices of the Emperor of Germany, had come the famous Doctor Johannes Erasmus von Thunichtsgut, whose culture was so colossal that, besides being the greatest German physician, he spoke seven dead languages and not a single living one; the Holy Father in Rome had despatched a saintly and sapient Franciscan monk, Padre Chrysostom, a wonderful exorcist, who, on three occasions, had driven away the Devil by prayers and marvellous spells; and the Bourbons of France had sent M. le docteur Henri Toussaint Je-M'en-Moque, who hid his tranchant talents and penetrating perspicacity under mincing manners and a tremendous, white-powdered wig.

All these wise men had come, accompanied by hundreds of tutors, teachers, mathematicians, schoolmasters, preceptors, dry-nurses, mentors, docents, and assistants. They had brought immense quantities of drugs, pills, instruments, bandages, and scientific tomes. Arrived in Bagdad, they had examined Zobeid. Then, promptly, as is the habit of scientific gentlemen and mild, tolerant scholars the world over, they had disagreed with each other—some even with themselves—on every single, solitary point. They had argued and counter-argued, by inference and comparison, by revelation and tradition, by theories physical and metaphysical, analytical and synthetical, philosophical and biological, rational and inspirational. Some, being gnostics, had seen in every experiment a hundred things which they did not see. Others, being agnostics, had refused to see what they did see. They had wound up by calling each other bad names:

"Fool!"

"Liar!"

"Charlatan!"

"Unscientific jackass!"

"Medicaster!"

"Humbug!"

"Quacksalver!"

"Sophist!"

"Dunce!"

"Unprincipled scoundrel!"

The insults had been as thick as pea-soup.

The German doctor had pulled the Frenchman's nose, and the latter had retaliated by drawing his rapier and painfully pinking the other in his generous stomach; and the Franciscan Padre had cursed Moses Maimonides by candle and book, while the Jew had repaid the compliment with black and cryptic curses from the Talmud and Kabala.

All this had not been of the slightest help to the poor little Princess; and even now the people in the Caliph's palace were making ready for the last solemn rites—with the slave women wailing and beating their breasts; the death gongs sobbing like lost souls astray on the outer rim of Creation and the reed pipes shrieking their shrill, dismal plaint; with white-robed, green-turbaned Moslem priests chanting the liturgy; and with the smoke from a hundred ceremonial fires mounting to the sky in thick streamers and hanging in ruddy, bloodshot clouds above the palace and telling to all Arabians that one of the dynasty of Bagdad was returning to Allah.

All this the Prince of the Mongols knew; and there was hidden laughter in the words with which he turned to to Prince of Persia:

"And so, Great Shah-in-Shah, you imagine that this flying rug of yours is the greatest rarity on earth?"

"Imagine? By Allah and by Allah—I know it!" replied the other. He asked his servants to spread out the carpet. "Look! Consider well! To travel through the air at one's will! Ah—to travel—travel . . ." He was waxing lyrical, as fat men will at the slightest provocation. "To travel! To see all the glorious wondrous sights! Fragrant fields! Golden ribbons of rivers! Elegant pagodas! Mountains bee-black and lapis-blue To travel—as I shall—side by side with the loved one, the darling, the apple of my eyes, my bride! Ah!"—addressing the Prince of India—"am I not right?"

"Quite right—in a way," admitted the Indian, who, sure of his own success, could afford to be generous. "Travelling is a wonderful thing. My divine ancestors agree with you."

And, quoting from the words of Indra, the god of air:

"'Indra is the friend of him who travels. Travel!

"'For a traveller's legs are like branches in flower, and he who travels grows like the tree and gathers his own fruit. All his wrongs vanish, destroyed by the exertion on the roadside. Travel!

"'The fortune of a man who sits, sits also; it rises when he rises; it sleeps when he sleeps; it moves well when he moves. Travel!

"'A man who sleeps is like the Iron Age. A man who awakes is like the Bronze Age. A man who rises is like the Silver Age. A man who travels is like the Golden Age. Travel!

"'Look at the happiness of the sun who, travelling, never tires. Indra is the friend of him who travels. Travel!'"

"Yes," continued the Indian. "To travel is delightful, and your flying rug is charming. Only"—he paused smiled—"you were mistaken about your travel companion, your bride."

"Mistaken?" echoed the Persian.

"Yes. For—I suppose—you referred to Zobeid?"

"Of course!"

"I am sorry," went on the Prince of India. "But she cannot go with you!"

"And why not, pray?"

"Because she is going with me!"

"Oh," demanded the Persian, sardonically, "is that so?"

"It is!" The Hindu held up the magic crystal. "For this—this globe which I hold in my hand—is the greatest rarity on earth! Here you can read and see whatever, wherever anything is happening to anybody! A gift from Doorga herself—Doorga—that delightful, divine, six-armed relation of mine! Consider the marvel of it! A light from heaven! A fact of facile and fecund felicity! A thing of never-ending, ever-changing interest! A necessity for every married couple since, once and for all, it not only banishes every possibility of boredom, but permits the husband to see what his wife is doing when she is away—and vice versa!" He turned to the Mongol Prince. "Am I not right, O Great Dragon?"

The Mongol laughed disagreeably; replied as disagreeably:

"A wise Mandarin once remarked that to speak of honey will not make the mouth sweet. Personally, I believe that you are both wrong. For I am sure that this little magic apple of mine will gain for me the hand of Zobeid if—ah—if she really means to keep her promise!"

"Eh?" came the Persian's surprised exclamation.

"You see," continued the Mongol, "during these last seven moons I have often wondered if Zobeid was simply playing with us, sending us on impossible errands, since, after all, she is a woman, thus perverse by instinct—or if she intended keeping her pledge!"

The Indian looked at the Persian, doubt sprouting in his brain as rice sprouts under the spring monsoon:

"Does she mean to keep her pledge? I wonder!"

"I wonder!" echoed the Persian.

"Let us find out!" suggested the Mongol.

"How?"

"By consulting the magic crystal!" replied the Mongol.

"Why not?" agreed the Prince of India.

"Why not indeed?" echoed he of Persia and of the paunch.

AT THE REGENT.

SPECTACULAR SCENES FURNISH THRILLS IN EMORY JOHNSON'S GREAT PHOTOPLAY.

Great Pacific Battlefleet, Squadrons of Sea-Planes, and Shore Batteries in Stirring Bombardment of Rum-Runners—"The Mail Man" Takes Rank as One of the Most Thrilling Productions of the Year.

With the entire Pacific battle fleet in action; with the big guns belching fire and shells in the fury of a tremendous bombardment; with swift seaplanes dealing death in a torrent of lead from the skies; with the shore batteries pouring their fire from the sandy reaches of the coast, Emory Johnson's great production, "The Mail Man," takes rank as one of the outstanding photoplays of the year. It will be shown for the first time at the Regent Theatre on Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Emory Johnson has produced "The Mail Man" on a truly lavish and sumptuous scale, by far eclipsing even his great productions of the "The Third Alarm," "In the Name of the Law" and "Westbound Limited." A young showman, with his sensitive fingers ever on the pulse of the theatre-going public, Johnson has that happy faculty of knowing what the public wants and doesn't fail to give it to them.

Together with his brilliant mother Emilie Johnson, he has fashioned a photoplay of which they both may well be proud.

Giving "The Mail Man," a timely twist in the development of the story, Mr. Johnson has supplied one of the most thrilling scenic punches ever devised for a photoplay. It is the pursuit of the rum-runners by the battle fleet. Not only do the battleships open fire on the marauders of the sea, who have already raided the mail boxes of a fleet liner, but the giant seaplanes are also called in action, spewing their torrent of lead down from the skies and shattering the fleeing cruiser of the rum-runners with well-aimed shots. These scenes were all filmed with the fullest co-operation of the United States Government, Mr. Johnson and his staff having been a guest for two weeks on board the U.S.S. New Mexico in Pacific Coast waters.

In contrast with the bigger scenes of action on the sea, are those of poignant human emotions on the land. The loyalty of the mail men, whose efficient organization is dramatized by Mr. Johnson is stressed in many engrossing scenes. The smooth functioning of the mail system that spans the nation and that reaches out across the seas is also developed with high skill by the producer.

Ralph Lewis, as the veteran letter carrier about whom the rush of events revolve, has one of the greatest roles of his career, according to the star himself. The family life of the mail man is shown in scenes of rare beauty. The devotion of his wife and the loyalty of the son, played by Johnnie Walker, and who also enters the service of the mail department, are developed with rare facility. Walker, indeed, has by all odds, the most imposing role of his career and he and Mr. Lewis appear in many scenes of gripping drama.

AT THE ROYAL.

"HOOT'S" LATEST HAS GOOD COMEDY.

In "40 Horse Hawkins," Universal-Gibson production, which opens to-day in the Royal Theatre, Hoot Gibson, the star, has set a mark for uproarious humor of the non-slap stick variety that will be difficult for even the humorous Hoot himself to equal again. It is true there is hokum in the vehicle, but it is convicing hokum.

But Hoot has no part in the melodrama. That feature of "40 Horse Hawkins" is taken care of by a competent cast of actors appearing before the screen as members of one of the old time road companies which went into the small towns and strummed on the heart strings of the unsophisticated residents. In a word, "40 Horse Hawkins" is a show within a show.

Hoot falls in love with the little ingenue and follows her to New York, where he gets a job as "supe" in a Broadway production in which she stars ,although he does not know it. Hoot's humor continues by reason of his seriousness in this strange environment, and he finally saves the show and finds the girl he loves at the same time.

Others who contribute to the merriment in "40 Horse Hawkins" are Anne Cornwall, Helen Holmes, Richard Tucker and Edward Sedgwick, who directed and takes a part.

THREE FAVORITES OF SCREEN IN SPECIAL FILM.

Percy Marmont, Marguerite de la Motte and Otis Harlan Head Cast.

Three favorites of the screen will be billed at the Royal Theatre on Monday, in a picturization of A. S. M. Hutchinson's well known novel, "The Clean Heart." The film version is entitled "The Clean Heart," or "The Cruelties of Life." In this production Percy Marmont, Otis Harlan and Marguerite de la Motte, have unique roles somewhat different from any in which they have previously appeared. The story presents a phase of life often met, but seldom treated in stories, that of a man who breaks down from overwork and fails to enjoy the fruits of his labor until after many strange and dramatic experiences.

ANDY GUMP BACK AGAIN!

Andy, Chester, Min, Uncle Bim have all come to life again at the Royal in another of those clever comedy creations. They may be seen to-day, Friday and Saturday, in addition to the Hoot Gibson production.

SMUGGLING BOOZE TO U. S. IS LEGAL

Exportation of Liquor From Canada in Past Year Has Doubled Itself.

OTTAWA, Dec. 4. — (Canadian Press). — Exportation of whiskey, ale and beer from Canada to the United States is entirely legal, if carried out within the meaning of the Act, according to a statement by the Department of Customs and Excise. Canada's whiskey trade with the American Republic has doubled during the twelve months ended October 31 last, as compared with the preceding year.

Washington officials concerned with the prohibition enforcement expressed surprise over the report of the Canadian Bureau of Statistics made public in Ottawa, showing that large amounts of liquor legally cleared to the United States. Treasury officials declared the Volstead Act held fast against importation, except for medicinal purposes, and that such shipments were by permits granted by the prohibition commissioner. At the same time Commissioner Haynes asserted no permits had been issued this calendar year. Officials had no definite estimate of the amount of liquor smuggled over the border or smuggled in otherwise, and did not understand whether the Canadian figures included such a movement.

Plague Has Spread to Great Britain Within Fortnight.

LONDON, Dec. 4. — (United Press).—Great Britain still resists the chewing habit, but crossword puzzles have proven irresistible. The checkered squares reached here only a fortnight ago.

Already nearly every London newspaper has succumbed and the number of addicts among newspaper readers is mounting rapidly.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

MIERS OF PERTH

To the Editors of The Presbyterian Witness:

DEPENDS UNITED MINISTRY

During the past few weeks there seems to have been a concerted attack made through the press upon the evangelical soundness of the Ministry of the Methodist Church in Canada. It may be that the ultimate object is to deter Presbyterians from entering the United Church of Canada, while in other cases the writers are making statements which they have never verified, or had means of verifying. There may be other cases, but only on instance have I noticed any attempt made to substantiate the charges preferred, but often the writers of these letters made vague statements which are couched in general terms, and applied to the above-mentioned ministry as a whole. Even in particular charges it is very easy to wrest a statement from its written or spoken context, and to make it mean something quite different from what its author intended.

Against such practices I desire to voice my protest. I have always held the great fundamental verities of the New Testament as being the foundation of our Christian faith, and I know many Methodist ministers personally who are sound in the faith as I understand it, who with real sincerity of purpose and moral earnestness are trying to lead men to salvation and the truth as it is in Christ. These men do hold the truths which centre in Christ as He is revealed to us in the Gospel and I am convinced that the great majority of that ministry do. If there are others who do not hold these truths the Methodist Church has it within its power to discipline them. I have never seen the term "Modernist" defined, but it is used by many today as a sort of heretical brand with which to stamp almost the entire ministry of a great Christian Church, which was born in revivalism, and has attained its present position by emphasizing the evangelical truths of the Bible.

Both parties in our own Presbyterian Church have their "Orthodox" and "Modernist" ministers so-called. But my observation leads me to believe that most of the ministry in the three uniting denominations is sound in the faith, and I therefore wish to make my protest against those who are conveying a wrong impression to many who have no means of weighing the truth of their statements. Such impressions do a grave injustice to hundreds of God-fearing men who are engaged in the ministry, and at the same time destroys confidence in the moral integrity of the Christian ministry as a whole.

Perth. JAMES H. MIERS.

Rev. Mr. Miers acceptably supplied St. Paul's church pulpit a few summers ago. He is an outstanding Premillenialist who within the past few weeks has come out in favor of Church Union. It is said that his church which was formerly opposed will go with their minister into the United Church.

Labor Will Make Determined Bid For Recognition as an Independent Group.

TORONTO, December 4. Canadian Press. — With the acquisition of an additional seat in the Legislature it is stated that the Labor group of the provincial legislature will make a determined bid for recognition as an independent group when the House assembles.

During the last session a question was introduced by Peter Heenan, M. L.A., for Kenora, who at that time intimated that Labor no longer cared to be associated with the remnants of the Farmers' party.

Now that Labor group has an additional supporter in the person of K. K. Homuth of South Waterloo, who was returned in the by-election following his unseating in the general election it is reported that official recognition will again be urged and new seats demanded.

Two former Fort Wayne, Ind., policemen pleaded guilty to holding up a bank and were sentenced to 21 years each.

IMMIGRATION SCHEME.

Three Salient Changes in U. S. Are Suggested.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—(Canadian Press).—In the Labor Department's annual report as made public to-day by Secretary Davis, three salient changes in immigration practice are suggested. The first would apply to citizens of Canada, Mexico and other North American countries outside the United States quota restrictions now governing the entrance of aliens from other lands.

The second would allow a temporary increase in the admission of aliens in times of established and particularized labor shortage in the United States.

The third would require registration and enrolment of all aliens admitted to the country.

FREDERICK M'GAUGHEY WENT TO GALLOWS IN EARLY HOURS WITH SAME CHARACTERISTIC ATTITUDE

Appeared to be Unmoved as Final Preparations Were Made For Execution.

A LAST FAREWELL.

Hangman Ellis Completes the Execution in Record Time of Ten Seconds.

(By Staff Reporter.)

LINDSAY, Ont., December 5th. — Frederick William McGaughey was hanged in the Victoria County jail at three minutes to four this morning, paying the supreme penalty for the murder of his sweetheart, Beatrice Fee.

It was still nearly three hours before dawn when he mounted the dozen steps to the scaffold—the altar on which his life was given to expiate the crime of which he had been found guilty and to vindicate the majesty of the law that decrees the life of a subject forfeit for the life he takes.

Sometime later a notice was posted on the jail, while the stars still lit the sky, intimating that McGaughey had paid his debt to society. And at that moment the man who had been so foolish in life was wiser than any man on earth.

He whose soul had lately taken flight from a body dangling in ignominy from a hangman's noose, had solved the riddle of the universe.

Sunset of Life.

The enactment of the last act in this grim tragedy in the stone fortress on Victoria avenue, virtually began yesterday afternoon, with the commencement of the series of last farewells between the doomed man and those who were dearest to him in life.

With the first suggestion of evening, and as the wintry sun sped—oh, so fast—downward to the horizon of the western fields for the last time in the experience of the condemned man, McGaughey's brothers were received for the final leave taking, and were present until midnight. His frail mother, kept in ignorance until then of her son's plight, was taken to the jail and gave him what consolation she could out of her own misery.

So affecting was this parting between the hopeless mother and the doomed son that the turnkey broke down and wept.

Ellis at Movies.

The hours running up to the finale were freighted with emotion for the citizens of Lindsay, unused to the varied sensations that tore them during the wait. Detesting the sordid crime that had robbed them of a girl who neared perfection in her typical budding womanhood, they yet hated the necessity of the death of another human being. Last night the jail was illuminated in many parts, where the relatives of the doomed man made their last farewells and where the sheriff and the hangman discussed the details of the execution.

Arthur Ellis maintained his incognito as Russell, under which he registered at the hotel, until a Peterborough man who was present at the last hanging in Peterborough, recognized him and gave away his identity. He left the hotel after supper, attended a picture show, and stayed the night at the jail.

While Children Play. .. ..

In the jail enclosure at 10 o'clock last night with the grim scaffold hugging a hollow of the inner courtyard, all was silence. But out on Francis street, a short stone-throw away, children sped down the hill on their sleds, laughing. Their voices, potent with the innocence of childhood, penetrated the jail, where sat McGaughey, a man who had plumbed the depths of human wickedness and absorbed all that a man could of life's bitter retrospection.

Towards Dawn.

The hours sped swiftly toward the breaking of another day. The expanse of gray stone walls, thrown into relief by the brilliant electric light, the iron latticed windows and the stunted scaffold, produced an effect at once picturesque and beautiful to the eye, but ghostly in the atmosphere of an imagination keyed to a sense of what was about to happen.

In the complete stillness of the night, broken only once or twice by the sound of a passing train, noisy as iron waves, splashing and dashing on an iron ocean — and by the hushed whispers of the watchers by the scaffold—the question "when?" kept pounding in one's ears. The strain of waiting was terrific.

Across the street the light burned all night in a house where the people had said, "We can't sleep, we will pray for his soul."

What agony the doomed man endured in that time can only be imagined, but if any suffering of his could atone for the anguish he had inflicted on the luckless girl who plighted him her troth, then he paid in full.

The Final Scene.

Absolute quiet reigned in the courtyard at a quarter to four. Suddenly the hangman appeared, watch in hand, and announced "All is ready." The jail officials and, the party of press representatives gathered at McGaughey's cell door, while Ellis pinioned his hands and then followed to the scaffold. McGaughey stood erect without a sign of fear in his eyes. He walked with a steady stride, and there was no hint of hesitancy to meet death in his demeanour. And yet he had no air of bravado. His face had the expression of a man resigned completely to a great ordeal and in his death he was more heroic than ever he had been in life.

He had declared to Leslie Frost yesterday, "My name's McGaughey, and I'll do it like a man."

The scaffold had been built in an angle of the inner prison yard and so surrounded by wooden sheeting and tarpaulin that it was impossible for anyone outside the enclosure to witness the execution. The floor was of solid plank, ten feet square, with the three foot trap door in the centre. A single electric bulb lighted the grim work. The noose was suspended from a stout beam above and hung with awful portent over the deep hole.

Ellis stepped up to McGaughey, whose arms were already pinioned, and strapped his legs with the same leather thong that he has used since his first execution.

The black mask was adjusted, the noose put in place about McGaughey's neck, while the clergyman recited the Lord's prayer, Ellis stepped to the long wooden lever that controlled the bolt of the trap door, pulled it quickly over and Mc-

QUEBEC BANK ROBBED BY UNMASKED BANDITS

Four Youths Raided Branch at Sherrington—Loot Was Light.

MONTREAL, Dec. 5.—(Canadian Press).—Police were combing the city and province last evening for traces of four gunmen who held up the sub-agency of the Banque D'Hochelaga at Sherrington, Laprairie County, yesterday morning, and escaped in a stolen automobile with more than $1,000.

The hold-up occurred soon after the bank opened. An automobile drew up before the door and four youths alighted. Without warning, one of them suddenly produced a revolver and levelled it at the cashier, while another covered the only other bank employee in the place. A third thug scooped the money from the cashier's desk, while the fourth acted as a lookout. None of them wore masks. Having completed their coup, the bandits ran back to the automobile and starterd in the direction of Montreal.

BOY AT FENELON FALLS KILLED BY AUTOMOBILE

Four-Year-Old Child Crushed to Death Against Curb.

LINDSAY, Dec. 5.—A sad fatality ocurred at Fenelon Fall Thursday when James Brandon, the four-year-old son of Mr. William Brandon, hardware merchant, was killed on Colborne street. The little fellow, with a comparison was in the act attempting to climb a telegraph pole when a McLaughlin car, driven by Mr. Harry Jackson, of Coboconk, hove in view. The boy attempted to cross the road in front of the car, and the driver in order to avert the accident, swerved his car to the curbing in order to reach the ditch. The front wheel jumped the curb, but one of the wheels caught the boy's body and his head was crushed against the curbing.

Dr. Johnston, coroner, ordered an inquest. No blame is attached to the driver of the car.

SEVEN PERSONS KILLED IN OAKLAND COLLISION

Thirty Injured When Train Struck Loaded Trolley.

OAKLAND, Calif., Dec. 5. — Seven persons are dead, two of them women, and thirty injured as a result of a rear-end collision between a Sacramento short line car and a Twelfth Street Key Route suburban on the Key Route Mole Thursday. The Sacramento train crashed into the electric.

One of the dead women was decapitated, C. C. Loughlin is the only identified victim.

First reports, which placed the dead at from fifteen to twenty-five, proved incorrect. In the confusion which followed the wreck and continued most of the day, accurate check of the situation was impossible.

Most of the injured were in the rear car of the Twelfth Street train.

The spot where the wreck occurred was within a few yards of the end of the dock portion of the mole. A little farther on and the trains would have been on the trestle built for nearly a mile into the bay — and drowning would have been added to the horror of the disaster.

BOOTLEGGERS OVERFLOW BURWASH ACCOMODATION

Find It More Economical Than Paying $1,000 Fines.

NORTH BAY, Dec. 5.—Ontario bootleggers are finding it more economical to spend six months in Burwash than to pay fines of from $1,000 to $2,000; according to a provincial police officer, who was in North Bay Thursday, enroute home from Burwash, where he delivered some prisoners.

He declares that the capacity of the prison farm's accommodation has been severely taxed since the recent plebiscite and that another big camp is being erected to care for the overflow.

SEAL POPULAR.

No fur will be more popular for trimming purposes this winter than seal, both for gowns and wraps.

HER DEATH AVENGED

"More Precious Than Rubies" was the maiden love she brought to the fatal tryst on a May night last Spring with Fred McGaughey, who at the hangman's hands this morning paid the penalty of his insenate lust.

Pity for McGaughey was excited perhaps not so much for his crime and the inevitable fate before him, but in his unworthiness for a love he had awakened in his youth, and apparently had won, without appreciating its value.

The State has settled its score with him, but in the eternal lists of those to whom pure love was given, McGaughey will be—perhaps pitied, like the savage who in his ignorance destroyed a priceless jewel worth more than his whole tribe.

ARTHUR ARGUES HIS INNOCENCE

Aide to Indian Prince Also Contends British Courts Are Incompetent.

LONG GRILLING

PARIS, Dec. 5. — (Canadian Press).—James Charles Arthur, former British army officer and aide-de-camp to Rajah Sir Hari Singh, the Indian potentate, who was the central figure in the London blackmailing case, underwent a three-hour examination before a French magistrate here Thursday and maintained his innocence of any complicity in the alleged plot to blackmail the Rajah out of a huge fortune.

Arthur, who is being held here on a British warrant, it is understood, will oppose extradition on the ground that the crime, if any, was committed in Paris and that the British courts are incompetent under the circumstances. Testimony in the sensational London trial was to the effect that the Indian prince was found with Mrs. C. E. Robinson, wife of the plaintiff in the suit in a Paris apartment. The alleged blackmailing grew out of this incident.

The former aide-de-camp, it was said, will insist on all the formalities necessary to extradition being fully carried out. The French magistrate has requested the British Embassy to submit further evidence and documents. It is expected that the extradition proceedings will drag on some weeks.

Over Fifty Years Ago Since Last Execution

LINDSAY, December 5. — It is over fifty years since an execution took place in Lindsay, and at that time, strangely enough, a man paid the penalty for the murder of a girl, James Nesbitt was hanged for slaying Miss Hopwood, and h body was interred in the jail yard, where the grave may still be seen.

ALLENBY BARES EGYPTIAN PLOT

INCREASE POLICE

LONDON, Dec. 5. — (Canadian Press).—The British Cabinet Ministers have been placed under special police protection, according to the Daily Mail. The precaution has been taken because of information received from the headquarters of Viscount Allenby, British High Commissioner in Egypt, that a plot has been discovered to assassinate prominent members of the British Government.

The Home Secretary attached so much importance to the information that he immediately ordered, according to the paper, certain of his Cabinet colleagues to be guarded day and night by armed police in plain clothes.

There is every indication, the Daily Mail says, that the plot is the outcome of propaganda fomented by the Wafd — the executive of the Egyptian Nationalists' organization—whose emissaries are spread throughout Europe, including England.

The discovery has impressed the authorities with the necessity of increasing the police force of England, especially in London, which had been greatly reduced through the economizing reforms set up by the committee of which Sir Eric Geddes was the head. Recent disclosures regarding alien and Communist activities in Great Britain have rendered such an increase imperative, adds the Mail, and Sir William Joynson-Hicks, the Home Secretary, is determined to add to the number. Many more detectives than usual were present at Albert Hall last night to protect the Prime Minister and other members of the Cabinet who attended the meeting there.

SETTELL FOUND GUILTY BY JURY; GOES TO PRISON

Former Secretary to Sir Adam Beck Sentenced to Kingston Penitentiary.

FOR THREE YEARS

Tells of Buying Booze in the Interest of Hydro—Paid for It Himself.

HAMILTON, Dec. 5.—(Canadian Press).—E. Clarence Settell, former private secretary to Sir Adam Beck, chairman of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission, was late Thursday afternoon found guilty of attempted stealing in connection with the cashing of a cheque for approximately $30,000, and sentenced to three years in the Portsmouth penitentiary.

"The strain was too much for me," Settell declared in his defense at the trial which concluded at noon yesterday. "I was an addict to liquor; I was pacing the floor nights. I was weary of the whole thing. I was disgusted with the way they were using me. I wanted to get away from it all. I wanted to go to South America and start all over again."

"And the check?"

The former Hydro secretary's eyes flashed. "It was coming to me," he declared with vehemence, looking squarely at the jury. "Every last cent of it. I figured it out. If ever a man had a moral right to such an amount, I am that man. If ever a man should have been reimbursed, I should have been."

Proclaims Right to Money.

His voice broke. His shoulders slumped, like a man suddenly relieved of a burden.

Settell's testimony, which occupied two hours, was the feature of this morning's session. At the close of his evidence, he was asked if there was anything further which he wished to say. "It is your last chance," Mr. Greer reminded him.

Settell faced the jury. Speaking slowly and in a voice that could barely be heard, he made his last appeal:

"For the amount of overtime and the money that I spent for the commission," he said, "I was entitled to the money which I took. I thought so when I took it. I think so now. All the money has been returned. I may have lost my reputation but I was honest. I tried to play the game. I was square."

Settell Tells His Story

"I entered the service about 20 years ago," Settell said, beginning his testimony. "It was not long after that before I was seized with Sir Adam's vision of the extension

Many Notable Nimrods Attracted By Wolf Hunt

SAULT STE. MARIE, Dec. 5.—Telegrams are coming in continually from notables in Toronto, Hamilton, Midland and other points offering their services in the wolf hunt to be staged by the Algoma Wolf Hunt Club organized by "The Sault Daily Star" at Barriver, Ont., December 9.

The latest wire was received from W. J. Taylor, publisher of "Rod and Gun," stating he would gladly donate a silver trophy for annual competition to the Hunter bagging the most wolves. The wolf hounds imported from the Blue Kennel Farm, Kentucky, arrived yesterday ,and are now under the care of Duncan Fremlin, master of the hounds, Barriver.

CANADA CLOSER TO MOTHERLAND

Sir George Foster, Guest at London Banquet, Cites His Observations.

URGES GOOD-WILL

LONDON, Dec. 5. — (Canadian Press).—Speaking last night at the British Empire League dinner to Senator Sir George E. Foster and Hon. H. H. Stevens, of Canada, who have both held the portfolio of Minister of Trade and Commerce in Dominion Cabinets, Major-General John E. B. Seely, who commanded the Canadian cavalry brigade in the great war, recalled that exactly seven years ago he was surrounded by the Germans and awaited news of relief by his brigade. Eventually he received the following message: "With reference to the Canadian elections now proceeding, please note your signal troop should vote as a unit and not with the Canadian dragoons."

Sir George Foster said he had been struck while in South Africa, with the "utterly silly" questions which had been asked him concerning Canada, but he was certain that airplanes and wireless would, before long, alter communications between various parts of the Empire and considerably change the outlook of every school child.

"It is not for Canada to say to the Motherland, 'you must give us a preference,'" said Sir George, "neither is it for the Motherland to say, 'there is no chance of us giving

M'GAUGHEY WITH GUARD

ARCHER NAMED AS NEW SIRDAR OF THE SUDAN

Present Governor of Uganda Recommended by British to the King of Egypt.

SUCCEEDS STACK

Engaged in British Activities in Africa Since 1902 With Notable Success.

LONDON, Dec. 5. — (Canadian Press).—Sir Geoffrey Archer is expected to succeed the late Major-General Lee Stack, as Governor of the Sudan. His name has been recommended to King Fuad, who, under the agreement of 1899, officially makes such an appointment on the recommendation of a candidate by Great Britain. The appointment probably will be made in a few days.

Sir Geoffrey now is the Governor and Commander-in-Chief in Uganda. He has been associated with the British possessions in Africa since 1902, and has undertaken several special missions for Great Britain in settling and investigating conditions on that continent. As Governor of East Africa, he directed the operations resulting in the destruction of the Dervish Power in Somaliland and definitely establishing British Dominion there.

The appointment of a successor of Sir Lee Stack as Sirdar of the Egyptian army, the other branch of his late activities, has not yet been considered. Col. L. J. Huddleston, Adjutant-General of the Sudan Government, has been acting as Sirdar.

BALDWIN'S AVOWAL.

LONDON, Dec. 5. — (Canadian Press). — Premier Baldwin, in the course of a speech at Albert Hall last night, declared that nothing was further from the truth than to say that the British Government sought to take advantage of the murder of Sir Lee Stack in order to restore the protectorate in Egypt, or undermine the rights of the Egyptian Government.

"Reservations made when independence was granted," said the Premier, "remain open to negotiations, subject to the essential considerations that foreign interests must be protected and communications kept secure while our obligations and pledges to the Sudan demand that we should respect the rights of the Sudanese no less than those of the Egyptians. But none of these considerations are incompatible with a mutual settlement which we hope and believe will be secured."

NEWS FROM BURNBRAE

Dairy Butter on the Market at Forty Cents a Pound.

BURNBRAE, Dec. 5.—Rev. B. A. McKenzie has ben speaking for the past few Sabbaths on the commandments. On Sunday last he gave a splendid discourse on the fifth, sixth and seventh commandments.

The officers and children of the Sunday School are busy practicing for the Christmas entertainment which has become an annual feature at Burnbrae.

Young People's Guild met on Monday evening with Mr. H. M. Donald, second vice-president as leader.

A number from the vicinity attended the fowl supper in St. Andrew's church, Campbellford on Tuesday evening.

Miss Merrill Upton, who has been teacher of the S.S. No. 1, Seymour, has resigned and will leave at Christmas holidays. The trustees have engaged Mr. Earl Fairman, who has been teaching near Hastings, to succeed Miss Upton.

Mr. Russell Johnston of Wellman's Corners who has been erecting Mr. Bert Hay's new barn will complete his work this week. This barn, which will replace the one destroyed by fire in October, is a modern plank frame construction with steel siding and roofing. The stables will be also fitted with steel stanchions and horse stalls. The completed barn is 14 feet by 40 feet and will add another to the collection of modern, well-equipped farm buildings in the Burnbrae district.

Mr. Will Hume returned with his herd of Ayrshires from the Royal Show last week. He fared very well in view of the strong competition, getting one first on a yearling heifer in a class of thirty-two. Northumberland failed to get the county herd class, this honor going to Quebec.

The hard frosts of the past week have finally ended ploughing with a lot yet to do and the farmers are now turning to wood-cutting, the wood being in splendid shape now for quick work.

With the close of the cheese factories a considerable amount of dairy butter is going on the market and is selling at around 40 cents per pound. A laying flock of hens is profitable now with fresh eggs selling at 50 cents and over per dozen.

CLEVER

Complex problems have simple solutions. Milton A. McRae, in his autobiography, tells how he built up the St. Louis Chronicle in 1887. It was a penny paper, but handicapped because St. Louis did not use pennies for change in those days, a nickel being the smallest coin.

McRae ordered $10,000 worth of pennies from the mint and got them distributed by inducing local merchants to price goods at 49 and 98 cents instead of 50 cents and $1. With pennies in their pockets, people bought the penny paper. Its circulation in one year jumped from 7,000 to 25,000.

MOTOR BOAT SHOW.

Peterborough Will Be Represented Again This Year.

The final arrangements for the addition of a live fish exhibit at the Trent Waterway exhibit in the National Motor Boat Show to be held in New York, January 2 to 10, was completed recently by a visit of President G. K. Fraser and Secretary of the Trent Waterway Development Association to New York, during which time the authorities of the New York Aquarium arranged to supply six glass tanks and a man to attend the fish for eight days. Water connections will be made by the National Motor Show Executive.

This concludes the efforts of Mr. W. H. Bradburn, M.P.P., and the association in securing the co-operation of the Provincial Government in sending the live fish to the exhibit. Although considerable difficulty is being encountered by the Department of Fisheries in keeping the fish for this purpose, Mr. D. A. McDonald has assured the association that the exhibit will be comprised of the best specimen fish available, so that when they are presented to the New York Aquarium at the conclusion of the show they will be living evidence on view to five million visitors per year at the Aquarium of Ontario's game fish.

Dominion Government Exhibit.

Through the efforts of G. N. Gordon, K.C., M.P., the exhibit of the three previous years will again be placed in New York, attended by one representative.

The value of this exhibit can be gained when it is noted that there was a sixty per cent. increase in American cruisers using the Trent Waterway during 1924 as compared with 1923.

The association has recently received a communication from Mr. J. E. Hoag of Los Angeles, Calif., stating that in June, 1925, he is commencing the first American trans-continental motor boat trip ever taken, and he will include in his itinerary the Trent Waterway. His cruise will commence at Astoria, Oregon, ascending the Columbia River 400 miles; boat portaged to the Missouri River at Fort Benton, Montana, cruising 2,600 miles to the Mississippi River, thence to Lake Michigan by the Illinois River and the Illinois and Lake Michigan Canal. From Lake Michigan he will cruise to Port Severn at Georgian Bay, Trent Waterway to Lake Ontario, thence via the Oswego and Erie Canals, Hudson River to New York City. Mr. Hoag is a journalist and photographer, and a story of his cruise will be published in the leading American magazines, and his final literary effort will be in the form of a book extensively illustrated from photographs taken en route. Mr. Frank Wilson, a motion picture producer, will also accompany Mr. Hoag, and the films procured will be distributed throughout the country.

SOME ANTI-UNIONISTS IN LINDSAY WEAKENING

St. Andrew's Church Members Won Around to Support New Union Church.

LINDSAY, Dec. 5.—The question of Church Union as it affects the congregation of St. Andrew's church in this town is not creating the bitterness as is in evidence in other centres. Some time ago a straw vote was taken on the question by the members of the congregation and the "antis" had a majority. Since that time the unionists, who comprise the wealthy element of the congregation, have been conducting a quiet, but effective campaign, have succeeded winning quite a number of the "antis" to their ranks. It is expected that when another vote is taken that a majority of the congregation will support union. Leaders among the "antis" state that no matter how the vote goes, they will stick to their guns and organize a new congregation.

A number of ministers of the Lindsay Presbytery htve issued a declaration of loyalty, and their intention to continue their ministry in the church of their fahors, which is now entering into the United Church of Canada.

OTONABEE YOUNG FOLKS ORGANIZE

Will Fix Up the War Memorial Plot—Officers Elected.

KEENE, Dec. 5.—The Otonabee young people met in the Town Hall on Friday evening and a fairly good attendance was recorded Many important matters was put before the meeting and fully dtscussed. Two of the most important of these were the election of officers and the amalgamation of the ladies' and mens' organiaztion. This was felt very essential for the welfare of the society It is proposed to make this winter one of great activity. It was also decided to enter a debating team.

A silver cup is being donated for competition between the Peterboro and Indian River clubs along with the Keene organization. Upon the suggestion of the past president the name was changed to Otonabee Young People's Organization, it being thought best to make it non political and organize under a name that would be broad enough to embrace all those of like thought who had the welfare of Otonabee and community at heart. The young people feel that there is a great deal that they can do in this district and are making plans to carry out some of the suggestions put forward at the last meeting.

President—W. H. Fletcher.
Vice-President—Frank Graystock.
Secretary —Miss Marjorie Renwick.
Social Commitee—Mrs. Wm. Edwards, Miss Isabel Nelson, Mr. Earl Doris.

The president and Mr. Frank Graystock were appointed delegates to a meeting of the debating society in Peterboro on Saturday, December 6th.

It was suggested by the president that the Association make an effort to raise money to put the monument plot in good condition. This was readily concurred in by those present. It is felt that this has been badly neglected by the township. It is hoped that by the consent of the community in charge of the monument and others associated with it that they will give the young people their support.

The young people with the support of the community expect by next summer to have this particular spot renovated and make it a credit to the village and community.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1924.

ONE BORN EVERY MINUTE.

The career of Leo Koretz, the Chicago man who has pleaded guilty to four charges of swindling, illustrates how credulous the general public is toward the aguments of high-pressure salesmen and promoters of dubious stock.

Koretz was himself a lamb before he started out to be a wolf.

Some one sold him a tract of land in Pamama that he found on inspection to be a swamp.

The victim decided to pass the loss on to the public, and with the bait that oil had been discovered on his land, he soon found the fishing to be good oil expectation, for "investors" poured some $2,000,000 into his hands.

There was no oil, no development, not even a derrick on the property, but the public plunged into the venture just the same.

It was the rawest kind of swindle, a "frame-up" that shouldn't have deceived the most credulous person, and yet Koretz soon was in possession of a huge sum.

The public seems to love dearly to be swindled, and it sometimes seems that the cruder the trap and the more impossible the proposition the more eager are people to risk their money.

MADE-IN-PETERBOROUGH.

Buying at home, a policy that should appeal to the common sense of every citizen means something more than merely buying goods from local merchants; it should be broadened out to include buying also the products of Peterborough manufacturers.

We do eat a lot of made-in-Peterborough cereals perhaps, eat bread made of made-in-Peterborough flour and paddle a made-in-Peterborough canoe, but these are only a few of the products that are manufactured here.

We have boats manufactured in Peterborough that compare with the best made anywhere, we have boots, sweaters and bathing suits and woollen toques and hosiery, and a score of other articles that are being made in Peterborough plants by Peterborough workers.

If our buy-at-home policy were working efficiently these Peterborough products would be sold by Peterborough stores to Peterborough buyers, and sold in quantities large enough to have an effect upon the employment situation.

The insistence by every customer on having Peterborough-made goods when these compare in quality and price to the imported article would mean much to some of Peterborough's industries, who, strange to say, find a better market for their products away from home than in the city where their payroll helps to add to the general prosperity.

SHOULD BE CLEARED UP.

In endeavouring to secure from the Department of Education a report as to the investigation in regard to the breaking into of the Collegiate Institute and the theft of a number of examination papers last June, the local Board of Education is taking a course that seems thoroughly justified.

It is a disagreeable affair, but there is no reason why it should be made worse than it need be by unfair suspicions being thrown upon pupils who are innocent.

The facts have been suppressed by the Department of Education, with the natural result that guiltless parties have been under suspicion.

If the information is in the hands of the department the local school authorities are entitled to it and are justified in demanding the facts.

Granted the articles stolen were the property of the department, but the building entered was the property of the Board of Education, and the latter body should know, as Chairman Green expressed it, "why and by whom it was broken into."

It is a case that should be cleared up; it is most unfair that censure should be laid upon young students who had no connection with the affair, and the policy of secrecy followed by the department has had the usual result of causing much guessing and needless suspicion.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC.

The Canadian Pacific Railway is using the newspapers to give the people of Canada in a series of articles some idea of the size of the organization and the part that it has played and is playing in the development of this country.

It is a very wise policy on the part of the company, inasmuch as older Canadians are likely to forget the history of the Canadian Pacific and newcomers have heard little or nothing about it.

Anxious as Canadians must be to have the Government-owned railway system succeed, they cannot at the same time shut their eyes to the fact that the fact that the C. P. R. has done much to build up the Dominion.

Canadians as a whole are proud of the C. P. R., with its thousands of miles of railway, its lodge hotels and the big steamships that fly its flag.

They rightly regard it as a proof of the enterprise and business ability and vision of Canadians, and as a Canadian institution that is the last word in efficiency and service.

It is well that people should be reminded of how thoroughly the development of the C. P. R. is interwoven with the development of the Western Provinces, and of how directly the Canadian Pacific is interested in Canada as the biggest taxpayer in the country.

SASKATCHEWAN'S SONS.

Canada's wheat has again won highest honors against the best that all the wheat growers of this continent can grow. It is a feather in the Dominion's cap of which her citizens are justly proud, says the Montreal Star. Ever since the day when Seager Wheeler swept the board in the first competition of the kind in 1910 Canada has triumphed every year save in 1921, when a Montana farmer won the championship, although the Dominion even then, had the satisfaction of knowing that the prize entry had been grown from seed supplied by Canada.

The fact that this year the prize was won by a man who came to this country from the cotton mills of Manchester to take up a homestead should be a finer advertisement for the Dominion than all the posters and pamphlets setting forth the rosy prospects of the intending settler. Three times in the last ten years Mr. Mitchell of Dahinda, Saskatchewan, has been crowned the "wheat king of the world." It is a fine record of achievement.

At the head of the Government of Saskatchewan, is a man who came to this country little more than a quarter of a century ago, became first a farm hand, then a farm owner, next head of the largest co-operative wheat selling agency in the world, and is today Premier of the Province.

Mitchell, with the world's best wheat and Dunning, Prime Minister, are examples of what perseverance, tenacity and hard work will do for the settler who comes here with little equipment save a genius for labor and faith in himself and the country.

PUTTING RESPONSIBILITY ON THE HOME.

W. H. Dunlop, Inspector of Reformatories and Jails in Ontario, is suspicious about the work of the jail reformer. In his annual report he says that "prison reformers come and go, but the criminal is still with us."

The Inspector stakes his hope on going farther upstream in the course of human life, and heading off the criminal line when it is young. He believes good sensible homes, clean environment and proper training can do more in the line of prison reform than all the efforts of reformers that are dusted over the finished product.

Mr. Dunlop is right. If London, for instance, were to find that its city water supply was bad, dangerous, and a menace to the whole community, it would not content itself with putting in a new lot of taps in all the houses. It would start going back to the source until it found the place at which contamination was taking place, and it would keep on going back even if the process took the workers to the place where the water comes from the ground.

In the business in which Mr. Dunlop is engaged the stream runs from the homes. Right there is the starting point of the great system of human distribution—it is there that the boys and girls get their first ideals of right and wrong, respect for their elders, proper conceptions of law and order. If the work is neglected there it means that an added load is passed on to some other agency farther down the line. The parents who neglect their plain duty may fool their consciences by hoping that the teacher in the day school or the worker in a Sunday school may make up for parental indifference. At best it is only a hope—the stream has started and it is not what it should be—the current runs a little faster as it meets and joins with other lives—the young mind has no fixed purpose, it has no strength of character, a thing that it had a right to expect from home training.

And because of this primary neglect we rush around to set up other traps in the stream; we erect one known as a juvenile court, and we look to that to pick up the boys and girls and tell them of things they should have been taught at home. If they escape this net in the stream, a little farther on we get them in police court, we send them to jail, and then we turn loose all sorts of effort to undo all the neglect.

Of course, no illustration can get down and walk well on all fours. There always have been and always will be cases where boys, and girls, too, have received every possible advantage of honorable and consecrated home training, yet they turn out a miserable disappointment, but they are the exception.

The home is the place where the work must be done, and it is the place where in far too many cases it is being shamefully neglected.—London Advertiser.

A STUDY IN SELF-DETERMINATION.

Among the litter of pompous phrases to plague a world almost talked to death is that originated by the late President Wilson, "self-determination of peoples." Literally applied, as exampled in Ireland, it would result in divisions so small, so economically helpless, that the result would be not a fusion but a hash. Egypt is an excellent case in point.

At the risk of unpopularity it may be said that government is not an end in itself, but a means to an end. That end is the happiness and security of the governed. Egypt has a traceable history going back more than six thousand years, and never in those sixty centuries did the country enjoy self-government or any other rule but that of an irresponsible autocracy. Never was life or property secure from the tyrant until Great Britain assumed the economic regeneration of the country, forty odd years ago. The dishonest tax gatherer, with his squeeze, was sent about his business. The British Raj laid its hand upon the shoulder of the fellah and he stood up, a man.

In the few years that Egypt has been turned over to the half-baked, over-educated, eternally taking political minority, safety of life and property has reverted to the days of Tewfik. The tax-gatherer, with his squeeze, is astride the neck of the fellaheen. There is decay in every public service and graft is rampant. The lives of Europeans are not safe, although much of Egypt's prosperity depends upon its attraction to travelers. The murder of Sir Lee Stack, the British commander of the Egyptian army, is only one of a score of outrages of the same kind. This is self-determination in practice.

But self-determination itself is morally indefensible when it is supposed to carry the right to determine the existence of alien races. Having wasted the Egyptian treasury, the Egyptian politicians demand Egyptian autonomy in the Sudan over a race different in customs, in color, in tradition and in religion; outnumbering the Egyptians themselves and entirely contented with the rule of their conquerors, the British. The shadowy claim of a suzerainty which the khedives could never enforce, without the backing of British bayonets and brains, repudiated self-determination, so far as the Sudanese are concerned.

Here is the story of self-determination, in a country which claims police control of one of the gateways of the world, the Suez Canal. The British do not confuse government with freedom, but they successfully combine the two. The Bolshevist impetus in Egypt is notorious. In the interest of the whole world the British Government proposes to suppress it before it has achieved its customary ruin.—Wall St. Journal.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Some county jails have no prisoners. The business seems to be all going to the big centres.

Trading ball players for aeroplanes is a reasonable proposition. The former often go up in the air.

A THOUGHT.

DON'T DO IT.

It's a poor joke—
When some woman blushes with embarrassment.
When some heart carries away an ache.
When something sacred is made to appear common.
When a man's weakness provides the cause for laughter.
When profanity is required to make it funny.
When a little child is brought to tears.
When everybody can't join in the laughter.

TO HANDLE SUDAN.

Britain Will Not Accept Any Interference From Anybody.

GENEVA, Dec. 4. — (Canadian Press).—Britain has informed the League of Nations that the British Government will not recognize that any signature by Egypt of the peace protocol will give Egypt the right to appeal to the League on matters connected with the Anglo-Egyptian dispute. A British note to the League says Britain will not accept any interference, whether by Egypt, the League of Nations or any individual Government on matters touching the Sudan.

TORONTO LIVESTOCK

Wednesday's snappy market at the Union Stock Yards took care of sales of 1,794 cattle, or 350 more than this day's receipts. Prices all round were steadily firm, and in a general way these for butchers are 50 cents a cwt. higher than last week.

For export next week, around 1,300 head of various cattle can be used, and these are wanted for Monday's market. Six prime export steers sold at $8.25 a cwt., and four others bought at $6.25 and $6.50; bulls $5, and cows $4.75 to $5.15 a cwt. A few handyweight butchers were sold at $6.50, good medium butchers were $5.50 to $5.75, and fair light beef heifers at $4.75 a cwt. Most of today's canner cows were $2.25 to $2.50 a cwt.

Today's few calves left no room for any change in this market. Choice veals are wanted by the good trade, and Wednesday's tops of 11½ to 12 cents a pound are expected to hold for the opening of next week's business. Good calves sold at 10 and 10½ cents a pound this morning.

The bang-up close in lambs on Wednesday with prices up half a dollar from Monday may result in heavier supplies next week, but there is a wide market for the nice handyweight 80 to 90-lb lamb that is a guarantee against much reaction from this week's closing prices. Today's top lambs sold at 13 cents a pound. Good to choice handyweight sheep were 6½ to 7½ cents a pound.

With over 12,000 hogs this week the heavy run has coincided with the packers' cut to $8.50 a cwt. f.o.b. The run usual at this particular time of the year is expected to be large again next week, and there is no hope of an advance under these circumstances.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

CHICAGO, December 4. — Largely because of good rains in the winter wheat belt, but also owing to foreign news of a bearish sort, prices averaged lower here to-day for wheat despite the relative strength of corn and oats. Wheat closing quotations were unsettled at ¼ to 1 1-8c net decline. May 1.06 to 1.06 1-8, and July 1.41½, with corn varying from 5-8 off to 1-8c gain, oats unchanged to 3-8 to 1-2c down and provisions showing 2 to 12c advance.

MONTREAL GRAIN.

MONTREAL, December 4.—There was some enquiry for Manitoba No. 1 Northern wheat here f.o.b. West St. John to-day but there was none offering in that position; and there was also a demand for sacked oats for the British West India and Newfoundland trade.

In Ontario malting barley there was an easier feeling and prices were reduced 1c per bushel with sales of car lots of No. 3 extra at $1.07 and No. 3 grade at $1.06 per bushel, extrack, while odd cars of Ontario No.

Constipation is ruinous to children—keep yours healthy with Kellogg's Bran

Constipation undermines a child's health. It saps his energy and makes him listless. It can lead to more than 40 other serious diseases. Mothers should take immediate steps to remove, safely and surely, the dangerous poisons from his system.

Kellogg's Bran—because it is ALL bran—brings permanent relief. Nothing but ALL bran can be 100 per cent effective. That is why Kellogg's Bran, cooked and krumbled, is universally recommended by doctors. They know it brings results.

If eaten regularly, Kellogg's Bran is guaranteed to give permanent relief in the most chronic cases of constipation, or your grocer returns your money. Kellogg's Bran acts on the intestines exactly as nature acts. It sweeps and cleans and purifies them. It makes them function naturally and regularly. It allows you to discontinue forever the use of harmful, habit-forming drugs and pills.

Kellogg's Bran, cooked and krumbled, is a delightful surprise to the taste—particularly if one has tried ordinary unpalatable brans. Kellogg's Bran has a delicious, crisp, nut-like flavor—an exclusive flavor. It is most enjoyable with milk or cream, sprinkled over other cereals or cooked with hot cereals. Try it in bread, muffins, griddle cakes and other recipes given on every package.

Have your children eat it regularly—two tablespoonfuls daily—in chronic cases, with every meal. Kellogg's Bran is made at Toronto, Canada and sold at all grocers. It is served in individual packages by the leading hotels and clubs. Ask for it at your restaurant.

I do not know why the impression arises, sometimes here, that Canada is looking more and more towards Washington and loosening her bonds with the Motherland. EXTEND HYDRO LINES.

Service is Being Extended in North Monaghan.

The Peterborough Utilities Commission are extending the electric light service along the River road from Crawford's Grove west, a convenience that will be appreciated by the fortunate ones, as the power can be utilized for a variety of purposes in connection with their business of market gardening. Already there are numerous inquiries from farmers further west as far as Springville as to the chances of the line being extended to their vicinity.

SETTELL FOUND GUILTY BY JURY

of Hydro-electric facilities to embrace the whole province. I realized, as he did, that the only way Hydro could be advanced was by gaining the whole-hearted support of everybody—party, press and individual. I knew that it was part of my duties, to go out and mingle with people and be a good fellow, and do all that I could to influence people on behalf of the Hydro. My habits were good when I started in, exceptionally good, I would say. I hardly knew the taste of liquor."

Mr. Greer asked him to define his duties in connection with the municipalities.

"My duty was to meet public men and public bodies, and get to know them so that I could answer questions, and meet mayors, aldermen, controllers, newspapermen, members of parliament, labor men and others—to entertain them and try and advance the cause of Hydro."

"Were you doing this alone?" "Yes."

Settell went on to tell of a function at Kitchener in 1912, when a celebration was held in connection with the turning on of the power there and all over the province. I went there and helped to arrange the banquet. There was a lot of liquor to buy and there were other things to look after. My room was always a mecca for visitors, who sought hospitality. I spent the money from my own pocket, day in, day out, year in, year out.

Got to Depend on Liquor

"When did you start to take a fall out of John Barleycorn?" The strain of entertaining and everything soon began to tell on me. I got to depend on it. I felt I could not do without it.

"Where did you get your liquor?" "Various sources, bootleggers."

"What was your condition when you were arrested?" "Very bad."

"I understand you have had nothing to drink for two months?" "No, thank God, I found out I could do without it." His relative condition was now far better, he said.

Settell declared that with the continued expansion of the Hydro his duties at his office grew heavier. He took the board meeting notes and transcribed them with often 175 matters on the agenda. "The night man at the Hydro would tell you that every night in the week I worked two or three hours after the rest of the staff, and sometimes continued till midnight."

Settell continued that his house was always open to visitors from out of town, to members of parliament, mayors and aldermen. His hospitality was always extended generously and freely. "I don't suppose any session of the local legislature cost me less than $300 to $400, and if it was a protracted session it would cost me more."

"Explain how this money was spent and why you thought it should be spent?" "It was a matter of knowledge at the Hydro that this was done. Mr. Lucas would put his hand on me and say: 'You are the publicity man, Settell, you are the host.'"

Settell said that when votes were to be taken and information was required as to how a certain man was thinking, he would be asked to get this information. "One way of obtaining it was by my hospitality."

Settell calculated that the amounts he had spent in 20 years would total $10,000 to $12,000 with interest.

He also told of his expenses in entertaining press representatives from Toronto at the time of the Hamilton election. He also entertained some municipal engineers who addressed meetings at Hamilton. Similar expenditures were made by him at the time of the Toronto election.

"Did you ever make any attempt to get these accounts passed through?" "I did, with no result."

Says Officials Knew

Settell said that officials of the Hydro knew he was making large expenditures in the interests of the commission for which he was not being recouped. Only a few years ago there had been a meeting in Mr. Andrew's office about a $500 advance. At that time Mr. Andrew said: "Settell must be fixed up. We all know he is acting as host for the Hydro and publicity man."

"I did all that I could," declared Settell, "I had an abiding faith and a deep loyalty in the Hydro. I was honest about my dealings. I haven't a cent today. I spent all my money for them. I spent $300 on the Hamilton election alone."

He was asked about the interest of the provincial commission in municipal affairs. "They took a big interest," he said. "Provincial cars and drivers were always sent. To lose an election was a blow."

He referred to an eastern trip which cost him $200. "They were asleep down there and we wanted to wake them up," he said.

"What about these hurry-up parties you speak of" "Well, often when the legislature sat late, a member would call me up and say he was bringing some friends down. I might be in bed. I would get up. It was good for the Hydro. Or if the boys were working late, they would come down. During the session there would be several of these parties every week. We would drink some and maybe play cards with a 25 cent limit."

"And now tell us about the check." "Well, the strain of the office had been getting on my nerves. The continuous entertainment at all hours began to tell on me. I was a sick man. Sir Adam did not spare himself and he did not spare others. I was sick, but I could not rest. They would send for me at my home. Once they even crawled into the bedroom window. Two days before I left I had to arrange for the entertainment of the municipal electrical association. I spent $15 on gin and beer for them."

$320 For Beer

"What about that $320 you were going to send to O'Keefe's?" "It was for beer. Maybe 60 cases spread over a period. I don't know just how long. Then just a few weeks ago, the editor of a weekly newspaper came to me. He said he had something on members of the staff. I told Sir Adam. He told Gaby to fix up a statement covering the charges. Gaby forgot. The editor called me and said he was going to run the story without any accompanying Hydro statement. I had to fix that up. I had the editor down to my house twice. There were meals and liquor to pay for. It cost me maybe $25. That last week I was there I suppose I spent $50."

"But to get back to the check?" "Well, I was getting disgusted with things that last year. I found myself getting addictedto liquor. I used to pace the floor nights. I was getting weary and disgusted with the whole thing. 'I was fed up. I figured up that they owed me at $15 a week. That was a fair enough estimate. It was less than I had been spending for 20 years. I added six per cent. for compound interest. And I made out my check."

Settell's voice broke for an instant but the next moment he gained control of himself. "If there was ever a man who had a moral right to the money, I did," he declared loudly. "If ever a man should be reimbursed, I should be."

"Was the check genuine?" "It was I had them sign it. I had a blotter in one hand. Mr. Pope was signing a bunch of checks at the time. I put mine in. He signed it. Then I took it to Sir Adam and he signed it."

Mr. Greer pointed out that in a press statement Mr. Pope denied that he had signed the check and had referred to it as an "imitation."

"What about this?" he asked. "He signed it," Settell replied emphatically. "I saw him, I swear he signed it. I stood by his side when he did it."

"What was said about the check at the time?" "Not a word."

Settell went on to tell of his departure from Toronto the next morning and of his arrival at Hamilton where he met Mr. Childs and asked him to identify him.

"The story that they have told from now on is correct," he said. "I got the money and was arrested."

Mr. Greer's Appeal

Referring to Sir Adam Beck as "the man on the bridge" and to Settell as "the poor devil in the stokehold," Mr. Greer argued for 45 minutes for the acquittal of the former Hydro secretary on ground that he had merely done what he was supposed to do in the interests of the commission and that he had only taken what he thought he had a right to, when he attemped to cross the border on October 3 last.

He appealed for fair recognition and a square deal for "the man who sweats and slaves below decks." Somebody had to do the spade work if the Hydro was to advaince the way it had. Settell had done it. The Hydro knew he was doing it. But they had made no attempt to reimburse him. Settell was a liquor addict. He had admitted it:

AUTOMOBILE UPSET AVOIDING ANOTHER

Several Occupants Inured Motoring to Party at Lindsay.

OMEMEE, December 4. — On Friday evening last a number of young people in No. 9, Ops school section, were motoring to a small house party at the home of the teacher, Miss Jamieson of Lindsay, when their pleasure rapidly changed to a night of adventure.

The lights on the car were dim but all went well until they neared MacArthur's school, when they came upon another car whose lights refused to shine and the driver, Mr. Herman Thorne, in order to escape hitting the car, which was stopped, turned the wheel so quickly that his machine toppled over, and required the aid of a garage man to haul it to Omemee, where it still remains.

Master Ivan Thorne suffered the greatest injuries, having been rendered unconscious, and when picked up and carried to a farm house nearby was suffering from a deep gash in his thumb which required six stitches to close, also the nail split on his middle finger, and other minor injuries. Mr. Cecil Thorne carries a severe mark on his forehead which affected the sight of one eye, while Messrs. Herman and George Thorne and David Pogue escaped unhurt.

Farmer Injured.

Mr. John McGuire, a farmer who resides about four miles north west of Omemee, suffered a painful accident on Wednesday evening. While endeavoring to tie one of his young cattle in the stable the animal threw his head up quickly thus catching his horn in his owner's cheek and inflicting a wound which caused five stitches to be put in at the local doctor's office to which he was quickly rushed.

Gashed his Foot.

Mr. F. McBain of town is confined to his home through an accident which befell him on Monday. While getting threshing wood in readiness he had the misfortune to almost sever his little toe with the axe which he was using.

FREDERICK M'GAUGHY WENT TO GALLOWS IN EARLY HOURS

Gaughey passed from human sight and his soul winged its way into the unknown as the clergyman finished the phrase, "Forgive us our trespasses."

It was just ten seconds from the time McGaughey ascended the gallows until the trap was sprung, a record, as Ellis told the awed gathering below. Pulsation ceased four minutes afterward, and in ten minutes the hangman cut the rope, announcing McGaughey dead.

At Peace With God.

McGaughey had seen the threatening dawn through clear eyes, manfully gazing on the unborn day. Whatever he had been in life, he was confident that he had made his peace with God.

At midnight he took a lunch of crackers and cheese and two cups of tea, refusing pie and cake. He slept an hour and spent the remainder of the time before his execution in conversation with Rev. F. H. McIntosh and Turnkey Groselle. His condition had improved of late, and he appeared nearer normal this morning than during the whole term of his incarceration. In the early morning he inquired as to the disposition of his body, and was pleased to think it would be handed to his relatives for interment.

Just before sentence was carried out the doomed man told his spiritual adviser that he was perfectly resigned to the fact of his approaching death.

Sentence Complete.

At six o'clock the coroner's jury under Dr. W. H. Clarke, viewed the body and returned the usual verdict that McGaughey died by hanging in conformity with a sentence of the court. Those who were present in an official capacity were Rev. F. H. McIntosh, pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church, Sheriff A. E. Vrooman, Dr. J. A. White, jail surgeon, Governor Stone, Turnkey Groselle and Dr. McCulloch.

It was only at half past six, just as the first yellow tinge of the new day gave light enough to see the watchers on Victoria avenue knew the drama had closed. The great wooden gates opened and the undertaker's wagon rolled out on its way to Riverside cemetery. It was even then scarcely discernable in the gloom of the court yard, and those who had awaited some other sign did not believe the thing they had been waiting for was anaccomplished fact.

Few people of the vicinity were to be seen about the neighborhood of the jail when the witnesses of the execution came out. And no demonstration of any kind marked the vigil.

Leslie Frost, whose fight before the jury for dismissal and later before the cabinet for commutation was a losing one, was with McGaughey yesterday and gave what encouragement he could to the man he had defended so ably but in vain.

Story of the Crime.

The crime for which McGaughey was executed this morning was the murder on May 24 last of his sweetheart, Lillian Beatrice Fee, on a lonely road outside Lindsay. The only story of the killing, which McGaughey did not deny, came from the dead girl through the lips of her dearest friend, Helen Stewart, of Toronto, when she recounted the events of the fateful night to a crowded courtroom at the trial in September.

And the sum total of Beatrice Fee's agony, her battle, and her death, is summed up in her declaration to her friend, "If I had been a bad girl, Helen, I would never have been shot." Defending her honor, she struggled with the drink and lust crazed man who she had promised to marry until he had shot her four times and his revolver jammed; she resisted his attempted assault even then, and refused the whisky he tried to pour down her throat. And then, dragged over dusty roads and thrown into the car, she was taken to his house, dragged over the rough yard, up steps and across rooms, to his bed where he stood over her working with his automatic and ignoring her agonized appeals that he get a doctor to relieve her suffering. McGaughey's crime did not end with the shots he fired. The exquisite torture that he inflicted on the girl who had loved him as he stood over her bed toying with his murderous weapon while she bled to death must have been reckoned in the account of his atrocity by the jury.

And today the dying girl's voice echoes back from the grave to still the voices of any who would lessen the wrath of the law upon her aggressor: "God will not let me suffer any more. If I had been a bad girl I would never have been shot."

The Irrevocable "If's"

If McGaughey had not been entangled in the vicious force of intoxication; if he had not fallen in with companions who thought it the smart thing to have a bottle handy; if Beatrice Fee had not made the love tryst for that Sunday night; the horrible thing would not have happened. But these "if's" belong to the irrevocable tragedy of history. Loving McGaughey.

And today when the trap sprung there wasn't a man among the party gathered in the shadow of the scaffold who didn't swallow heavily and who was not sorry that Fred McGaughey had taken the path that meant his going out that way.

Was It Meditated?

The fact that McGaughey, on his visits to Toronto, carried the revolver, was put forward by the prosecution as evidence that he was ready to commit the crime when opportunity and provocation offered. When he stopped the car on the road that Sunday night he had been drinking. The revolver was in his pocket. He asked Beatrice Fee to marry him at once, and she refused, telling him that she could not marry a man who drank. He declared "If I can't have you, no one else shall. You have broken my heart and you won't break another", and drew the gun and shot her as she sat, defenceless in the car. She struggled with him, turning the revolver aside time after time, but he poured four shots into her body.

At one time she even escaped from the car, with wonderful virility that indicates her physical perfection, and ran staggering down the road in a vain attempt to evade her heartless aggressor. It was vain, indeed, with such a man as McGaughey, who pursued her and shot her again as she fell and crawled through the dust of the road.

Two hours after the tragedy Helen Stewart arrived at the house to which Beatrice Fee had been taken dying—the house to which she had expected to go this fall as the bride of the man who killed her. There Miss Fee stretched her arms toward her friend and passionately declared "Thank God you have come, Helen. I have been lying here for hours praying that you would come."

Helen Stewart rushed to the side of the blood soaked bed and kneeled there pillowing her friend's head on her arm while the pitiful story of a man's pitiless brutality was poured into her ears. Unused to such tragedy in her 17 years of life, the scene made a vivid impression on Helen Stewart, and in telling the events to the court she brought all the pathos of outraged innocence to bear on the dramatic recital, as the dead girl spoke through her lips.

McGaughey, coward after his cowardly act, asked for his gun that he might shoot himself and attempted to take Paris green that he had in his pocket in a handy phial. He was subdued by his brother Lawrence and taken in charge by Provincial Constable Storey.

And today he expiated, so far as legal atonement reaches, the crime that stands alone in the history of the district, and probably in the history of Canada, as the most brutal and bestial.

Nothing can recall the beauty and charm of the girl whose young life he took twenty-seven weeks ago today, whose shattered body that was so perfect in life lies beneath its earthen cover in Emily cemetery; and no sacrifice of his can atone the loss of Beatrice Fee's love for her parents and family. 'A life for a life", says British law, and British justice has been astisfied.

A very pleasant social afternoon was held by the ladies of the congregation of the Methodist church, in the Sunday school room, on Thursday afternoon, when the executive of the Ladies' Aid entertained the ladies and were invited to be present. There were between seventy-five and one hundred present.

Mrs. J. A. Irwin, the president, after singing an opening hymn called on Rev. W. Elliott, the pastor, to talk to the ladies. He spoke on the "social" side of Church life. We must not only maintain our social life in the church but we must cultivate it. As a church we must be friendly, sociable—not only welcoming any strangers who come our way, but holding them after they come. He spoke of the coldness of some of the churches to-day and gave some illustrations regarding the same. Miss Helen Wood favored the audience with two beautiful solos.

Mrs. G. W. Hammond gave a reading, "Art and Nature." Miss L. M. Hawley was the accompanist for the solos.

The President, in her closing remarks, welcomed the ladies on behalf of the Executive, and asked the co-operation of all the ladies in all the undertakings of the church. She also hoped more ladies would join the Aid and help make their funds larger by a larger membership.

Refreshments were served at the close of the programme, and all appreciated the kind invitation of the Executive.

Omemee Branch Favors Teaching of Bible in Schools.

OMEMEE, Dec. 4.—The regular meeting of the U.F.O. of Omemee, was held in the club room on Tuesday evening Many matters of business were discussed and the final arrangements were made for the oyster supper, to be held the beginning of the New Year. Mrs. W. Brown and Mr. F. G. Sandy were appointed a programme committee for same, while Messrs. W. Veals, T. A. McConnell, R. H. Johnston and D. Weir are a committe to make definite plans for the occasion.

A resolution was passed at the ladies meeting to keep the club room open and heated on Saturday evenings for the benefit of the members who cared to use it during the winter months

A copy of resolutions which are gathered from the various clubs and are submitted to each club before being sent to the Annual Convention in Toronto this month, was on the table and some of the resolutions which the Omemee organization would advise are:

1. That Bible training be taught in all Public Schools.
2. That domestic Science be taught to girls in the Schools.
3. That Military training be disapproved of in schools.
4. That a longer period intervene between the arrival of immigrants and the allowing of franchise.
5. That the Department of Agriculture be asked to give grants to the U.F.W.O. in the same proportion as to the Women's Institute.
6. That the franchise be given to a farmer's daughter as well as to his son.

CHEAP POWER FOR RURAL DISTRICTS

Sir Adam Beck Assures Farmers of Reduction in Rates of Power.

TORONTO, Dec. 5.— (Canadian Press) — Impending reductions in rates of Hydro Power in Rural Districts were announced yesterday by Sir Adam Beck to the members of the agricultural inquiry committee of the Ontario legislature.

Lower rates were declared by Sir Adam to be result of the Ferguson Governments legislation of last cession bonusing rural secondary as well as rural primary lines by 50 per cent and it was said they would go far towards meeting views of agricultural community on the matter of cheap power.

The views of the farmers, as expressed through half a dozen speakers, were essentially the same, namely, that the hydro should be made available to the farmer by the government upon a more generous plan. Increase of bonuses to both primary and secondary lines was urged, the view being that the government should bear 100 per cent of the cost of secondary lines. Exception also taken to 20 year contract to which farmers at present must obligate themselves. Further plea made for greater local automomy both in the matter of constructing lines and in the matter of group of farmers being given power which is now given to the municipal corporations of making contracts for sale of power from their plant within their own district where such contracts are approved by the Ontario commission.

THE COUGH OR COLD That Settles on the Lungs Is Hard to Get Rid of

These are the kin dthat are dangerous; the kind that weaken the lungs, the kind that allow the germs of consumption to get a foothold in the system.

Mr. John E. Luloff, Golden Lake, Ont., writes:—"Last year I had a cold, and a cough which seemed to stick on my chest. I tried different preparations, but they did not seem to help me any. I was advised, by a friend, to try and when I had taken a few doses I began to feel that it was doing me good, so I kept at it and inside of a week I was relieved of my trouble."

"Dr. Wood's" has been on the market for the past 35 years; you don't experiment when you buy it; put up only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

ITCHING ECZEMA DRIED RIGHT UP WITH SULPHUR

Any breaking out of the skin, even fiery, itching eczema, can be quickly overcome by applying a little Mentho-Sulphur, says a noted skin specialist. Because of its germ destroying properties, this sulphur preparation instantly brings ease from skin irritation, soothes and heals the eczema right up and leaves the skin clear and smooth.

It seldom fails to relieve the torment and disfigurement. Sufferers from skin trouble should get a little jar of Rowles Mentho-Sulphur from any good druggist and use it like a cold cream.

LINDSAY WOMAN WAS FOUND UNCONSCIOUS

Lying on Kitchen Floor When Police Entered House Through Window.

LINDSAY, Dec. 5.—Mrs. Bacon wife of John James Bacon, who is serving a ten-year sentence in Kingston Penitentiary and who was on trial for murder at the Fall Assizes, is at present in the Ross Hospital in a serious condition. She had not been seen about her home since Sunday, and when Chief of Police Umphrey entered the house through a window, he found the woman lying unconscious on the kitchen floor. She was rushed to the hospital where it was found that she was pulseless and was suffering from exhaustion and exposure. There was also a scar on her face and forehead The woman has been living alone for some time. Fears are entertained for her recovery.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Peterboro, Dec. 3rd, 1924.
To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Wednesday night Mr. Donald Sutherland, M.P., sought to blame others than himself, for the redistribution as it, at present, effects West Peterboro.

Let me say that Mr. Donald Sutherland voted twice to include in West Peterboro, Otonabee, Douro and Lakefield, which he failed to tell the audience.

There is no need of him trying to buffalo the public, as others have done, with the sham and pretence that the Conservative party in the House of Commons were not responsible, under its leader; Mr. Meighen, for their votes in favor of the Peterboro redistribution.

Regarding Mr. Sutherland's complaint that he was shut off from a discussion in the House of Commons, Mr. Donald Sutherland tried to discuss this matter upon a vote in the Committee of Supply, which had not a thing to do with the Honorable Duncan Marshall, and was irrelevant, and I ruled the debate out of order, the same as I did the discussion of any other member which was not in order, and if Mr. Sutherland thought that he had a good case, his proper course was to appeal from my decision, but he accepted it, which was some indication that it was right.

If Mr. Donald Sutherland complains about Welland, why did he not move an amendment in the House, as he was a member of the Redistribution Committee?

The answer is that he did not have any complaint to make, that he was willing to back up and support by his vote, but he is willing to howl about it to people who do not understand the real situation, and particularly when he did not disclose to them that he voted twice in favor of the redistribution affecting West Peterboro and Midland Ontario. — Yours truly,

G. N. GORDON.

PUBLIC LIBRARY SUPPLIES EVERY NEED OF PEOPLE

Circulation This Year Expected to be Over 100,000 Volumes Loaned.

VARIED PROGRAM

Business Men Find Information on Every Conceivable Topic on Shelves.

Peterborough's Public Library is coming into its own. People are recognizing more every year that it is an institution of the people, for the people, and supported by the people; an institution that will enter with acceptance into their everyday life. The library is a community centre, having books and material of interest to all the people in the community. And the 77,000 volumes that went into the homes of Peterborough from its shelves last year could tell how the work is appreciated. As for the junior library, with its 30,000 circulation, it is one of the best features in the city, according to children and adults alike.

The library has two great functions to perform—first, to aid in educating the people of the community, and, second, to spread that highest form of recreational pleasure, the joy of reading. It is primarily, an educational centre. The Peterborough library has on its shelves books relating to all occupations, professions, trades and handicrafts, which do much to help people in their daily routine of work, help employers by creating a new efficiency in their employees, and open up vistas of new careers to the members of the community who are just starting out on life. Much self-education and self-help is done with the aid of the Public Library, which has been called "the poor man's university." Leaders in educational reform are working more and more towards the idea that "to teach a man to read intelligently opens all knowledge to him." The Public Library offers the opportunity to the man who has the foresight and initiative to grasp it.

That the people of Peterborough are realizing this is shown by the great number who use the library to aid them in their businesses, and to obtain books which give them inspiration and a broader vision in their outlook on life. It is expected that this year will total 80,000 volumes taken from the senior branch and 35,000 from the juvenile branch, a total of 115,000 books read by the people of Peterborough in a year. The patronage of the library has shown a healthy increase every year, the accessions of books increase every year, and the most remarkable increase in interest is shown in the reference to pamphlets and documents on every conceivable subject that are carefully filed and listed. There are 24 000 volumes on the library shelves, 1,692 pamphlets and 6 big cases of clippings containing authentic information on every subject under the sun. Of the books, 1,552 have been acquired this year, including new volumes purchased, magazines bound and books given to the library. Every year sees the donation of 100 or 150 books by citizens.

Schools Helped.

Between the schools and the library there is a strong link. A great number of teachers—the majority, in fact—are library patrons, and the library endeavours to aid them in their great task by supplying them with inspiring and helpful books. Another class of the school world that benefits by the library is the Normal School, from which embryo teachers come regularly to make use of the text books and reference library. There is scarcely a day during the school term when pupils of the Collegiate Institute are not crowded around the big tables "swotting" on some subject, or thumbing ponderous tomes in search of inspiration.

To business men the library offers reference material on all subjects, gazeteers, blue books, pamphlets and maps, which will give immediate answer to business inquiries.

Contented Readers.

The other great work of the library is the giving to the people of books for recreation. To the man or woman who can enjoy a book the world will never be a boresome place, even though it sometimes seems very stern and hard. The contented people of the world are the readers, and to those people who can enjoy, after their own day's toil, pursuing the lives of other human beings with their struggles, their ideals, their failures and successes, pleasure of the finest kind is given through the Public Library. An attempt is always made at the library to give to the reader the best literature that he can enjoy.

Unfortunately the library suffers a certain loss through mutilation, but this is not so pronounced as a few years ago.

Magazines and Papers.

In still another department does the library offer inestimable advantages to the public. This is in the reading rooms, one for women and one for men, where are to be found seventy magazines and newspapers, regularly received and placed in the handy files. Here, seated in an easy chair in a well lighted and heated room, the acme of comfort and amusement may be had by any citizen—free of charge. Eight of the periodicals are given free to the library.

The hours during which the library is open are from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. for reading and from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. for circulation. On Sunday the reading room is open from 2 p.m. until 5.30 p.m.

Library Board.

The Library Board includes the outstanding business and professional men of the city, educationalists and lawyers. The present personnel is V. J. McElderry, chairman; W. G. Morrow, E. H. D. Hall, H. R. H. Kenner, A. Mowat, L. D. W. Magie, William Stevens, John Corkery and (ex-officio) Mayor J. J. Turner. Mr. Corkery, the dean of the faculty, has been on the Library Board forty years.

Probably the greatest factor in the success of any Public Library is the librarian, and in this Peterborough is fortunate in having the services of F. M. DelaFosse. Mr. DelaFosse is perfectly at home in the maze of books that surrounds him and is an unerring guide to any subject on which information is sought. He is widely read, and is himself the author of many interesting and instructive treatises on the art of reading, both for benefit and for enjoyment.

Mr. DelaFosse has able assistants in Miss Genevieve Sullivan, Mrs. Strong, Miss Gertrude Hood, children's librarian, and Miss Myrtle Knapp.

YOUTH

To young men who are wasting their precious time, and to parents who are neglecting their children's health, we recommend the following from "Forty Years in Newspaperdom," autobiography of Milton A. McRae, the newspaper publisher-genius: "The brevity of life is a startling thing when analyzed. A generation is only a little more than 33 years. One half of the human race dies before attaining the age of 17; one-quarter before the age of 7."

PRIVY COUNCIL HEARS WEST ON FREIGHT RATES

Concerted Appeal Against Railway Commissioners' Action on Crow's Nest Rates.

DEMAND EQUALITY

Parliament Flouted by Commission's Order, Counsel Argues.

OTTAWA, December 5. Canadian Press. — "In my opinion a cardinal axiom of government has been violated, and Parliament has been flouted." Thus, H. J. Symington, K.C., counsel for the prairie provinces, expressed himself in referring to the recent order of the Board of Railway Commissioners setting aside the Crow's Nest westbound rates. Basing his appeal on constitutional grounds Mr. Symington yesterday, in the course of a lengthy address to the Privy Council, requested a summary rejection of the recent majority judgment of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

"Since when, may I ask, has the Board of Railway Commissioners become His Majesty the King in the right of the people of Canada. I have nothing more to say."

Only three members of the formidable array of counsel which gathered here to argue for or against the judgment of the Commission had been heard when the hearing was adjourned last evening.

Mr. Symington had spoken on behalf of the Prairie provinces, S. D. Woods, appearing for the Cities of Saskatoon and Edmonton, had argued against discrimination as between localities, and G. C. McGeer, K. C., representing British Columbia, had emphasized the existence of a rate barrier between the Pacific Province and the rest of Canada which he regarded as extremely unjust.

Premiers Present.

Nearly all the members of the Cabinet gathered in the large railway committee room of the House of Commons to listen to the appeal, and, in addition to counsel, a large number of individuals representing municipalities and organizations interesteed assembled.

Premier Bracken of Manitoba, and Premier Greenfield of Alberta, were present.

Mr. Symington's argument, briefly put, was that Parliament had never relinquished control of maximum railway rates, that the principle of parliamentary control had been accepted by the railway itself, that the rates provided for in the Crow's Nest Pass Commission agreement were authorized by parliament and that the only body which could alter or rescind them was parliament itself. The constitution by parliament of a body with jurisdiction over railway rates had in no way impaired the control of parliament over these maximum rates, he insisted.

Equal Treatment.

Mr. McGeer demanded equality of treatment at the hands of the transportation companies for all parts of Canada. The Crow's Nest Pass agreement, if interpreted from a strictly legal point of view might result in the continuation of discrimination against his provnce.

He thought that the government should not wait for the judgment of the Supreme Court, but should act under its own supreme powers.

"Equality of treatment is not a matter that needs the interpretation of the Supreme Court," he declared.

DIED IN THE BUSH.

Popular Resident of Garden Hill Died in Woods North of Sudbury.

Word was received by Mr. D. Munroe, of Garden Hill, that his son Charlie was dead, but no details as to his demise were sent. Charlie was very popular about here, and was widely known. A few days ago he left for Sudbury and has since been employed in the bush. News of his sad and sudden death will come as a great shock to his numerous acquaintances.

A.Y.P.A. DINNER AT ALL SAINTS

Fourteen Branches in the Peterboro District Represented by 192 Delegates.

WORK OUTLINED

Last night was a banner night in the history of the Peterboro District Council of the Anglican Young Peoples 'Association, being the occasion of the annual banquet which was held this year in All Saints' Parish Hall. About two hundred members from the City and District Parishes sat down to well-laden tables prepared by the Ladies Guild of All Saints. During dinner the Sunday School Orchestra of All Saints led by Mr. Fred Smith, entertained the gathering with popular music. In the intervals community singing was led by Mr. Devey.

The District President, Mr. R. Stone of Millbrook opened the programe with a few remarks and then proposed the toast to the King. Rev. J. D. Paterson then made the address of welcome, saying that it was a great honour to have the largest gathering of the year at All Saints. This meeting, composed as it was of members of the Association from all over the district, should be a source of great inspiration to the officers and members of all the branches, and indicated the great force for the advancement of the church which was present in the Young Peoples' organizations.

In reply to Mr. Paterson, the Rev. Walter Cox of Lakefield said that the A.Y.P.A. had a great place in the work of the church and that they could and would deliver the goods.

192 Delegates.

A vocal solo by Mrs. Trotter was well received and an encore demanded. Mr. Devey then called the roll of the branches and the call was answered by members from Lakefield, Omemee, Millbrook, Cavan, Hastings, Havelock, Apsley, Perrytown, Cobourg, Newcastle, St. John's, St. Luke's, St. George's and All Saints', Peterboro. Mr. Devey also numbered the delegates, there being one hundred and ninety-two.

The prinicpal speaker of the evening was Mr. McConnel, President of the Toronto Local Council. His subject was, "The Task That Lies Before Us," as it concerns the Branch, the Council, and the Individual member. The task of the branch is to bring the young people into closer touch with the work and worship of the church. This can be done by operation and the aim of everyone should be to help the other fellow up. The task of the council is to help the branches by providing an opportunity for the interchange of ideas and methods. Gatherings such as this banquet inspire enthusiasm, enthusiasm inspires action and action brings results. The duty of the individual is most important as the branch is like the members. The task of the member is that of Christian Fellowship, sharing in common the fourfold ideal of work, worship, fellowship and edification.

Miss Graham's Thanks.

The next item on the programme was a solo by Mr. Lewis. The chairman then called upon Miss Graham, Past President of the district for a few words. Miss Graham thanked the members for the wholehearted support accorded her which was responsible for the work the District Council had achieved. A saxaphone solo by Mr. W. King, a reading by Mrs. Connolly, and a vocal solo by Mr. H. Rush followed. The accompanist for the musical numbers was Mr. F. Smith.

Rev. Mr. Weir of Omemee moved a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. McConnell for his coming here and giving such an interesting address and Rev. Mr. Williams of Millbrook seconded the motion. All present showed their concurrence by hearty applause. The meeting then closed with the benediction pronounced by Rev. Mr. Cox.

WOMEN'S AUXILIARY MET IN LAKEFIELD

Rev. Walter Cox Gave Illustrated Address on Church History.

LAKEFIELD, December 4. — On Tuesday afternoon, the Women's Auxiliary of St. John the Baptist Church, held an open meeting in the Sunday school building. A number of members and friends were present and sister societies were well represented.

Rev. Walter Cox occupied the chair and Mrs. J. W. Todd presided at the piano. The hymns sung were "From Greenland's Icy Mountain," and Blest be the Tie that Binds." The prayers were a collect, the Lord's Prayer and the Auxiliary Prayer, the two latter being said in unison.

Mr. Cox gave the address, which was most interesting and was listened to with close attention.

His subject was "Vision and duty" as related to missions, and quoted St. John 4:25: "Behold, I say unto you, 'Lift up your eyes and look upon the fields, for they are white already to harvest,'" from this vantage ground he proceeded to point out his conception of the missionary's dity, as follows: the duty is interwoven with the entire body of revelation as it has come to us in type, symbol, psalm and prophecy, divine command and apostolic injunction. Here is a word which to my mind, defines the strategic position the disciple of Christ is called upon to take up for all time. It was drawn from the Lord, as I like to think, by the vision of men trooping out of Sychar to interview Him at the bidding of the woman, whose testimony to them had been: "Come, see a man who told me all things that ever I did. Is not this the Christ?" and the Master sees in that crowd a vision of the multitude that would ever lie off the church's frontier; and His word to His disciples is "Behold, send!" As He speaks the thought of the Sower and the Reaper, and of the great Harvest Home, led Him on to speak of the connection that such a vision was intended to have in their duty and service. We may think whatever we like of Joseph's dreams, but these early visions surely had a purpose, and who shall guage their influence on his future career

The thought that somehow or somewhere God was ordering his life and was going to give him important work to do — think how it prepared him for the fiery trials of Potiphar's household, for the awful depression of prison life, and at length for the exalted dangers of court life in the land of Egypt. We come to the Temple at Jerusalem and watch the young man praying there. What a ministry lay before him, and yet how could he face it? Never had religion been at so low an ebb. Never had loyalty and power been so unblushingly irreligious. "I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up." Who shall estimate the power of that vision for hard duty and painful sacrifice to Isaiah in the dark days that were then all put upon Israel? Or come down to that moment when the last of the Apostles is a prisoner of the Roman Empire in an island fortress. How helpless seemed the Christ against the might of the great heathen empire. How slow the progress and at what tremendous cost! Surely that man needed a very special vision; but is it not true that the Lord is and ever will be in the midst of His children; that sin shall not prevail; that victory is not doubtful but certain. The devil's mischief will be brought to an end and the Tabernacle of God will be with men, and sorrow, death and tears shall be no more. Who shall estimate the power or service of such a vision, whether to those who had to run their race in the first century or now? The words I bring you from the great Master suggest to me, that, before we can look profitably in the direction He indicated, we must get a clear vision of Himself, and to this vision let me, in the first place, invite you.

The Lord came into the world not only to reveal the Father, not only to lay a solid foundation stone for His everlasting Kingdom, but to enlist disciples on whom He could depend. That need was then and that need is now. It is therefore of the last importance that we should examine some of His methods. People often imagine that those were very simple days when Andrew, Peter, James, John and others received their call to the discipleship of Jesus Christ, but indeed they were not.

The political situation was desperate. The church was nearly combed with formality and unbelief. In the midst of such conditions there comes the sudden revelation of the person of Jesus of Nazareth, and the word He has for those with whom he came in contact, and who seemed stirred to some genuine interest in His mission, was "Come and see." Look at that scholar sitting under his fig tree poring over his manuscript and evidently trying to read the signs of the times. Watch now the genuine but crude primary enthusiasm of Phillip, his friend, puzzles him, as he tells him out of his first inaccurate impressions of a new found Messiah. Watch Nathaniel, as he at length follows the wise advice, "Come see for yourself." What a vision it was! The Master reaching the honest heart of the scholar as he draws near—the scholar adoring the divine insight of the teacher, until there comes the impassioned cry 'Rabbi' thou art the Son of God. Thou art the King of Israel." Here is a clue to the Master's method in enlisting disciples from first to last. It was necessary to make them absolutely sure of Him in order that they might be absolutely confident and trustworthy for Him in the days to come; and there are two confessions which stand out from the rest as typical illustrations of the effect His personality had on them. "Lord to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life. We believe and are sure that thou art the Christ the Son of the living God," and the other is that last night in the upper room, "Now we believe that thou knowest all things, therefore by this we believe that thou comest forth from God." This strong confidence arising from the Lord's personal character and divine insight and foresight only needed His own blessed spirit to rivet it on their hearts, in order to beget that strong confidence which, in later days, enabled these men to "turn the world upside down." The same vision of a personal Lord is needed now and should be able to produce the same result. This personal dealing between the souls, this vision of Himself, this coming under the spiritual influence of His own word—these surely are primary conditions of discipleship, and never were they more essential for ward work to be done than now.

Only thus can we have witnesses who can say: "I know". It is our duty to bring the practice of the church back as speedily as possible to that of the earliest days. The common way to bear witness on the largest possible scale. Jerusalem was to be the centre. The uttermost parts of the earth were to be the circumference. The promise was a Divine endowment of spiritual forces that should be sufficient for this world-wide witness. Does not the Lord's own words about the "witness" and "the power" provide us with an altogether new hope for the best use of present opportunities. Here surely is a promise that in the degree in which we His disciples are obedient to His command to bear witness on the most Catholic scale, in that degree shall His power be felt in our own church and nation. In the interest then of the great Harvest Home which is our hope, let us keep our vision of the Lord very distinct and clear. Let us watch from the great vantage ground, the marvellous and constantly changing panorama of human history. Let us know by careful study the developments as they come to pass in the great world as our harvest field and see that the overflow of our church's life and nation's life is such as will interpret to it our Lord and Master. Let us not be afraid we shall lose for our own land anything of what it so sorely needs. The circulation of this life blood will keep the blood at the heart strong and pure and sweet

These are some of the visions! these some of the plain duties that the Lord by His spirit would say before us and upon His disciples. May He also give us "the hearing ear and the undertsanding heart".

Mr. Cox illustrated various parts of his lecture by apt touching stories which carried their own special lessons.

At the close of the meeting afternoon tea was served to the visitors by the members of the W. A.

Master Gerald Dunford entertained a number of his friends on Monday afternoon and evening in honor of his fifth birthday at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Garfield Dunford. The young people spent a delightful time in playing games and in singing. The beautiful birthday cake, with its five candles all alight, which centred the tea table, was the admiration of the youngsters.

Illustrated Lecture.

Rev. Walter Cox gave an illustrated address on "Church History" in St. John's School-room Monday night, under the auspices of the A.Y.P.A. This is the first of a series of lectures, and dealt with this important subject from the day of Pentecost (the birthday of the Church) till about the year 600 A.D. The lecture was intensely interesting, combining a most romantic story and historic facts.

Yes, There is a Santa Claus

Years ago a perplexed little girl wrote a letter to the Editor of The New York Sun, saying: "My father says if you see it in The Sun, it's so; tell me truly, is there a Santa Claus?" Mr. Frank P. Church replied with a beautiful editorial, a part of which follows:

"Not believe in Santa Claus! You might as well not believe in fairies. You might get your papa to hire men to watch in all the chimneys on Christmas Eve to catch Santa Claus; but even if they did not see Santa Claus coming down, what would that prove? Nobody sees Santa Claus, but that is no sign there is no Santa Claus. The most real things in the world are those that neither children nor men can see. Did you ever see fairies dancing on the lawn? Of course not; but that's no proof that they are not there. Nobody can conceive or imagine all he wonders that are unseen and unseeable in the world.

"You may tear apart the baby's rattle, and see what makes the noise inside, but there is a veil covering the unseen world which not even the strongest man, nor the united strength of the strongest men that ever lived could tear apart. Only faith, fancy, poetry, love, romance, can push aside that curtain and view and picture the supernal beauty and glory beyond. Ah, Virginia, in all this world there is nothing else real and abiding.

"No Santa Claus! Thank God! He lives, and he lives forever. A thousand years from now, Virginia, nay, ten thousand years from now, he will continue to make glad the heart of childhood."

SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF CHRIST CHURCH, CAMPBELLFORD

Consecration Services Performed Years After Erection by Bishop Strachan.

WAS FIRST CHURCH

1854 Church Was Roofed—Slabs of Wood Used as Seats.

CAMPBELLFORD, Dec. 5.—The seventieth anniversary services of Christ Church, held during the month of November, closed Sunday. The present church was built seventy years ago, but was not consecrated as it was not free from debt. In 1861, when the debt was paid, the consecration services were held by Bishop Strachan. (This is a rule of the Anglican Church that, to be consecrated, a church must have no debt). When there was no church, missionaries used to come and hold services in barns or any place they could find suitable. From the record book some information is gathered. In 1835, on the 7th day of June, Rev. Mr. Harpur came from Belleville and visited Seymour Township. Major Campbell was living in what is now Campbellford at the time. Mr. Harpur tells of his visit in the following words: "The next day I proceeded to the Township of Seymour, which, though not within the limits of the Midland district, I was directed by the Lord Bishop to visit occasionally. From Major Campbell I met with the most kind and encouraging reception, and learned that the inhabitants of the Township are particularly desirous of having a clergyman resident among them, and to whose maintenance they would willingly contribute. They have also held the building of a church or churches in contemplation; but owing to some little disagreement about the proposed site, they have never yet been able to carry this into effect." Mr. Harpur tells of another visit which he made on August 16th of the same year. "He officiated in the morning in a barn near Major Campbell's, and in the afternoon, on the other side of the river, in the upper room of a grist mill belonging to Mr. Ramsay. On this occasion Mr. John Tice kindly acted as clerk, both morning and afternoon. On the 23rd of August, 1835, Communion service was held, at which there were twenty-four communicants. The barn where the morning service was held was near where the Agricukural Grounds are at the present time, and the grist mill spoken of was on the opposite side of the river, somewhere near the First Dam. In September Seymour was again visited, when he found that they had decided to build two churches, one on either side of the river, and that the sum of thirty pounds per annum, for three years, had been subscribed towards the support of a resident clergyman. This was not fulfilled as Seymour continues on Dr. Bethune's list of 'distant stations' as late as 1849. Dr. Bethune was at that time rector at Cobourg, Archdeacon of York and afterwards Bishop of Toronto.

A record given now shows the year 1861, when Rev. Edward C. Bower was the missionary in charge of the district. Mr. Henry Rowed described Campbellford at that time to be composed of three or four little log cabins, surrounded by a forest, and named Seymour Bridge. Mr. Bower held services in an old log building near where the Paper and Pulp Mills now stand. This belonged to a Roman Catholic named Boland, who kept the post office. Mr. Bower lived in a small log house near Mr. Chas. Bonnycastle's home. While living there the settlers came to the services in their farm wagons, bringing the missionary with them. Later the place of worship was changed to an apartment over a general store, owned and occupied by Mr. John Gibb, where the Standard Bank now stands. In 1863 Mr. Bower was changed to another place, and J. S. Clark came in his place. Mr. Clark was a missionary for Percy as well as Seymour from 1853 to 1856. It was during his time that Christ Church was built, in 1854, just seventy years ago. During that summer, as soon as the church was partly built, the services were held in the church. When Mr. Rendle, an old settler, came to Campbellford in 1864, the church was roofed, but there were no pews, the congregation sitting on boards resting on blocks of wood, and the clergyman preached from a board raised up with props.

November 9th, 1854.—Work done at the church. Received from Mr. H. Rowed, church warden, for strapping walls and altering door, twenty pounds.

August, 16th, 1855 — Plastering the church. John Forbes, Thirteen pounds ten shillings.

When pews were put in the church Mr. Rendle made and presented a pulpit of butternut to take the place of the rough board used before The earliest record of confirmation is in August 1856, when Miss Annie Rowed, (sister of Mr. Henry Rowed, late of Campbellford, but now in Saskatchewan), Miss Rosina Rendle, (now Mrs. (Dr.) Bogart, who is Mrs. A. J. Jenkins' mother and lives with her), Mr. Frank Bonnycastle (Mr. Chas. Bonnycastle's father) and renewed their vows and received the Bishop's benediction. A class in 1858 numbered seventeen and included Ellen Rowed, Catherine Keys (who was an aunt of Miss H. Campbell), Richard Bonnycastle, (father of Frank Bonnycastle), Lydia Archer, (the late Mrs. A. Rendle) and Wm. Archer, (father of J. P. Archer). The next confirmation class was in 1861, July 17th with sixteen members, amongst them being Henry Rowed, Ernest Denmark, Charles Bonnycastle, Miss Thomasin Bedford, (who is still living and resides on Queen street) and M. I. Archer. It was during this visit of Bishop Strachan, that the church was consecrated. This was the Bishop's last visit to this Parish, as he died in 1867

In 1855, on Jan. 29th. Henry Rowed and his wife, Kate Rowed, gave over twelve acres of land to the Bishop to be held upon certain conditions and the church and present Rectory were erected. Though at the time there was a frame building which was used as a parsonage. This plot of ground and frame building belonged to Captain John Tice of the British Army. He had this land from the Crown, and part of it including the old house was sold to Mrs. Elizabeth Carlow, who gave it to Henry Rowed. He later gave it to the church as this was the wish of Mrs. Carlaw. There was no resident clergyman in the Parish from 1856 to February 1858. The last entry in Mr. Clarke's name was dated Feb. 10th 1856. During this time occasional services were held by visiting clergymen, especially Rev. Charles Ruttan. The first resident clergyman when the church was consecrated was Rev. F. J. S. Groves. Besides having services in Campbellford for Seymour West congregation, he also held services in Warkworth for Percy and at the English Line School house every other week for Seymour East. Mr. Groves adopted the system of pew rents which lasted for about forty years. These rents were recorded in pounds, shillings and pence. The present Rectory was built in 1871, in the time of J. S. Baker, rector. For ten years, Rev. R. W. Hindes was Rector, he following Mr. Baker. The gallery in the church was built in 1876 and in 1883 the chancel was added and a cemetery was consecrated. In 1888 the cemetery was enlarged and the church was re-decorated in 1889. This was during Rev. T. Walker's time. During the time that Rev. W. E. Cooper, M.A., B.D., was rector, there were several improvements added to the church, mostly gifts New windows of colored Cathedral glass, a thank offering from the members of the Woman's Auxiliary, new doors from the late E. J. Burke, a beautiful and expensive altar cloth, brass vases from Confirmation class of 1893.

A very costly brass lecturn by E. A. and Mrs. Bogg, windows, stone font and white silk frontal from the Willing Workers; Memorial Stain glass windows in the east wall of the chancel in memory of the late Robert Cockburn, the gifts of his niece Mrs. Hobden, now living in New York City.

Mr. Cooper was methodical during his life and while in Campbellford he left the usual records of baptisms, marriages and burials, and also a memorandum of all the improvements made with a record of the Communions of individual members of the Parish.

In 1908 Rev. W. E. Cooper died suddenly but his diary was written up to noon on the day of his death. He made a comment on the Christmas offering of 1900, which shows his sense of humor "Thirty-eight people gave 5 cents each. Christmas offerings to the parson !!! Grand !!!? Total $17.89. Rev.A. J. Reid, M.A, succeeded Mr. Cooper. The improvements during Rev. A. J. Reid's stay the Rectory was painted and papered and the steep incline of the walk to the Rectory was cut away The year 1904 being the 50th anniversary of the building of the church, Jubilee services were held December 4th. At this time a pipe organ was installed and dedicated, the amount contributed being five hundred and thirty dollars. The following are some parochial notes of the event:—

"Much pleasure and we hope lasting profit was derived from the admirable and eloquent sermons of our special preacher, Rev. C. E. Skey, who certainly had such a well filled church as has seldom been seen in Campbellford. The generally expressed desire that at its first trial the organ should be presided over by an expert musician was duly satisfied by Mr. L. J. R. Richardson, of Norwood, who drove over at his own expense for choir practice on Saturday and service on Sunday. The choir did their very best, and the music being thoroughly congregational was joined in most heartily by the crowded and reverent assembly."

We should not omit to mention that the children of the Sunday School fulfilled their loving part in contributing to the special fund of the day their offerings at the children's service, amounting to seven dollars and thirty-two cents"

The beautiful brass dish of octagonal design, "the decent bason" of the Rubric of the Communion service, which forms the second part of the Memorial of our late Warden was used for the first time at all the services."

During the term of Mr. Chas. Carpenter, who followed Mr. Reid, several added improvements were made. In 1911, a bath room was put in and the rectory painted and papered. In 1912 a choir vestry was added to the church. New furnaces were installed in the Rectory and church, and the church re-decorated During the five years from 1912 to 1917, the following gifts were presented to the church:—Pulpit by the Misses E. M. and B. Wallace; Credence table by Miss Muffit; a chalice by Mrs Robert Linton; two collection plates from part of the Hebden bequest, and a brass altar Rail by Mrs. R F Bullen A surpliced choir was also instituted on Easter Day, 1914, Dr George Archer, son of the late Wm Archer was presented with a gold watch, on the eve of his departure to the mission field in India. He preached at the evening service.

All departments of the church did their very best to make this 70th Anniversary month a great success and even the boys and girls in the Sunday School have done remarkably well in helping to bring the funds up to the desired amount. Not only were the services a success financially but a greater interest has been taken in the church and all have been inspired to better things. After listening to the splendid sermons for the four Sundays, with the exception of one, the speakers were former pastors:—Rev. A. J. Reid, of Toronto; Rev. Chas. Carpenter, of Toronto, and Rev. C. E. Clarke, of Belleville. The fourth Dr. G. F. Kingston, M.A., of Trinity College, Toronto. A college friend of the present Rector, Rev. G. C. Clarke.

Notices, written on paper with pictures of the church at the top, were sent out to all former members living in different parts of the world and asking for some aid to raise the twenty-four hundred dollars Up to the present about five hundred dollars have been sent in from these for which Christ Church is very grateful.

Framed photoes of all the Rectors since the consecration of the church, in 1861, are hanging in order at the Parish Hall on Rear Street.

The following are the names with dates of their stay as Rectors:—Rev. F. J. S Groves—1858-1868; Rev. J. S. Baker—1868-1875; Rev. R. W. Hindes—1875-1885; Rev. T. Walker—1885-1891; Rev. W. E. Cooper—1891-1901; Rev. A. J. Reid—1901-1911; Rev. C. Carpenter—1911-1917; Rev. C. E. Clarke, 1918-1924.

During the short interval between Mr. Carpenter and Mr. Clarke's coming Cannon Rollo, of Toronto, preached to the Congregation of Christ Church.

DOWNEYVILLE NEWS

Social Events in the Village —A Brisk Auction Sale.

DOWNEYVILLE, Dec. 5.— A progressive euchre and social was held here in the hall Wednesday evening and was a decided success. The Elwood Orchestra from Lindsay furnished the music for the dancing, and during the evening cards were played at some twenty tables. The ladies prize was won by Miss Hazel O'Neill, a bar pin, and the gentleman's prize which was a pair of gold cuff links was won by Mr. Clare Scully. After the cards refreshments were served by the ladies and the remainder of the evening was spent in dancing.

On Tuesday a very successful auction sale of farm stock implements and household furniture of Miss Mary Connell was held. The day was fine and a very large crowd was present. Everything sold at fairly good prices, while George and Ted Jackson of Port Perry were the auctioneers. Miss Mary O'Connell with her mother intend to reside with Mrs. O'Connell's daughter, Mrs. Michael Hoolihan, north of the village.

We regret losing Mr. and Mrs. Thos. F. Crowley and family from our parish and that is another farm idle. All these people are leaving here but no one is coming to take their places. Mr. Crowley and family have been life long residents of this place.

The many friends here of Mr. James H. Lucas will be sorry to learn he is seriously ill in the Ross Memorial Hospital in Lindsay and hope to see him out again soon.

WILL KILL WOLVES FOR THIRTY CENTS

Mysterious Product of Western Man Offered to Mayor Turner For Development.

A plan to rid the country of wolves for 30 cents has been put up to Mayor Turner by Fred Larsen, postmaster and storekeeper at Fanny Bay, B.C. Mr Larsen read newspaper reports of the wolves over-running the country north of Peterborough, and hastened to write His worship offering to go 50-50 on a proposition that should, he says, net "$10,000 for bounty alone, let alone the skins and getting rid of the wolves"

Wolves are the most tricky of animals to avoid traps, the letter informs the Mayor, but this is not a trap. The mysterious agency that will rid the county of wolves will weigh only 2 ounces, and one is enough for the district. It is not poisonous, and cannot hurt cattle, horses, sheep deer or moose its originator says.

Mr. Larsen has not patented his mysteriously powerful agency, and seeks someone who will develop it and give him fifty per cent of the proceeds. He is eager to know if Peterborough has a good bounty on wolves, in which event he would probably come here with his two-ounce, non-poisonous mystery, and clear them all up.

MAN SOUGHT IN MURDER TAKES CRIPPLED CHILD WITH HIM IN FLIGHT THAT ENDED WITH CAPTURE

By ERNEST L. LYNN.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 5.—This is the story of a little girl—with a six-pound iron brace on her crippled leg—who ran away with a man wanted for a policeman's murder.

Criminologists will shake their heads over this, seeking an explanation.

They will not wonder so much at the part the little girl played, for Leota Horton is only seven.

But they will wonder at the strange love of Albert "Red" Holt for this little girl and her mother—an emotion so strong that, although a fugitive charged with murder, he took Leota and her mother with him on his mad flight and thus brought about his own capture.

"Red" Holt was wanted for the murder of Policeman Michael Hahnel, who was shot down on Oct. 17 while arresting two men for a traffic violation in Shaker Heights, a suburb.

He was captured nine days later in Wheeling, W. Va., his money gone, spent on Mrs. Margaret Horton and her little crippled daughter. He refused to desert them.

Alone, he could have escaped—if not for good, at least for a long time. But he made his choice, and elected to take with him the two he loved best in the world.

Leota still prattles about the speed of "Red's" car.

"We passed all the cars on the road," she boasts, "police and everybody."

Leaves Family for Them.

It was a sordid love affair at best, this affection between "Red" Holt and Margaret Horton. For Holt already has a wife and two children, and Mrs. Horton has not yet been divorced from her own husband.

But the love of "Red" Holt for the crippled Leota was real.

And Mrs. Horton explains her own devotion for Holt thus:

"You can't know what it means to have someone bring sunlight into the life of a little girl—your own flesh and blood—a little girl that you see carried off to school every morning in a wagon full of other children with cruel iron braces on their bodies.

"Her own father never abused her, but neither he nor anyone else paid much attention to her either. And she was so little and pitiful.

"But 'Red' adored her. If Leota wanted to go any place with us, 'Red' took her. There was always something in his pockets for her. He took her to movies. She loved him.

"And so I loved him. I love him now. I'd go through it all again

"He is so tender and kind with women. He knew just what I needed in life. I shall never fail him. He loves me and I trust him."

They Stick by Him.

"And what of 'Red's' wife and children?" they ask Mrs. Horton.

"That makes no difference," she replies. 'Red' did not love them. It is just me and little Leota."

Police charge that 'Red' Holt and a companion, each with a previous prison record, shot a ploiceman who was riding with them to the station.

Shot him, they say, because, although they were arrested for speeding, they feared arrest for a hold-up they had just committed.

Holt protests his innocence.

Society's finger is turned against him. His wife is obtaining a divorce because of his infatuation for "the other woman."

No one sides with him but a woman and a girl.

The woman who says she loves him in spite of everything.

And the little seven-year-old girl with the cruel iron brace who adores him because he was kind to her.

HE LOVED THEM

Left/Leota Horton in the arms of Detective Lieutenant Emmett Potts. Upper right—Albert Holt, who hough being police, took the little crippled girl and her mother along with him, Lower right—Leota's Mother, Mrs. Margaret Horton.

MRS. FISHER AND KIDNAPPED BABY

When Mrs. Wilbur Fisher, of Boston, was granted a divorce and custody of her two-year-old son early last summer, she little knew the heartaches that awaited her. In August her baby was snatched from her sister and hurried away in a limousine. Months passed in following futile clues. The search finally came to an end in Montreal, where at a baby farm, Wilbur, Jr., was once more clasped in his mother's arms.

ROBERT HORN RESIGNS.

Quits Job as Vice-Chairman of Baldwins Limited.

LONDON, Dec. 5. — (Canadian Press).—Sir Robert Horn has resigned the vice-chairmanship of Baldwins, Limited, and some papers assume the resignation is the outcome of Sir Robert's chagrin at not having been appointed Chancellor of the Exchequer by Premier Stanley Baldwin. He is the largest shareholder of the firm. Other papers assert Sir Robert will shortly become a member of the Baldwin Cabinet as head of the Admiralty, whose present head is W. C. Bridgeman.

GERMAN BUTCHER ADMITS THE KILLING OF 27 BOYS

HANOVER, Germany, Dec. 5.—(Canadian Press.)— "I want to be dead before Christmas," is the insistent demand of Fritz Haarman, Hanover butcher, whose trial for murder of twenty-seven young men since 1918 opened yesterday.

Haarman, who at first gloated over the murders he had committed, now acts like a man violently insane, jumping about, excitedly tearing his hair and demanding that the trial be hurried along. Haarman confesses to the murder of fourteen but agrees that the total of victims may have exceeded that number. He admits cutting up the bodies, but denies seling the flesh as animal meat.

IF YOU ARE NOT WELL HERE IS YOUR KEY TO HEALTH!

Hattonford, Alta. — "Being run-down after the 'flu' I was in a weakened condition, had dizzy spells and shortness of breath, followed by faintness. The middle age period made things seem as though I'd never feel well again, but I was determined not to give up. Hearing of Dr. Pierce's famous Golden Medical Discovery I sent for a bottle, followed the directions, and soon felt less tired and faint, and finally I got back to my normal state. I have thanked God many times for the restoration of my health so I could remain with my family, and I gladly recommend this Discovery of Dr. Pierce's for it is so pure, and worth a trial to any one who is run-down."—Mrs. Gertrude White, Crystal Springs Farm.

Golden Medical Discovery is put up in Dr. Pierce's Labratory in Bridgeburg, Ont., and sold by all druggists in both tablets and liquid. Send Dr. Pierce 10c for trial package of tablets.

PRAIRIE WOOL CLIP

Three Provinces Total 2,690,000 Lbs. Worth $631,700.

REGINA, Sask., Dec. 5.—The estimated value of the total wool clip of the three prairie provinces for the past year is $631,700 obtained for 2,690,000 pounds of wool. Alberta heads the list with 1,250,000 and received the best price which would average around 25 cents a pound. N. Saskatchewan had 840,000 pounds for which an average price of 23 cents was obtained. Manitoba's yield was 600,000 with an average price of 21 cents a pound.

TAXING PROBLEMS.

Relief For Ontario and Quebec From Legal Liability For Double Taxes.

TORONTO, Dec. 5.—(Canadian Press).—Relief for Ontario and Quebec citizens from legal liability for double succession duty taxes in case in which testators property is in both provinces, depends now upon the ratification of proposals which are before Ontario and Quebec Cabinets. Having returned from conference in Montreal with Quebec Government officials, Hon. W. H. Price, Provincial Treasurer, and Hon. W. F. Nickle, attorney general have submitted concrete proposals for reciprocal waivers of taxes by two provinces which are calculated to end vexing problem of long standing.

At present Ontario estates holding Canadian Pacific, Bell Telephone, Bank of Montreal, or other prominent stocks having headquarters in Quebec province have been obliged to pay both Ontario succession duties and Quebec succession duties.

CO-OPERATION NEEDED.

Coolidge Says U. S. Should Be Closer Associated With European Countries.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5. — (Canadian Press).—President Coolidge's outstanding message to the Middlewest in his two addresses here yesterday, was a pronouncement that the United States must end the policy of isolation and enter into co-operation with other nations.

Guarded as were the remarks, they revealed clearly that the President is prepared for closer association with Europe than characterized the unofficial assistance of the Dawes programme in which the Government took no formal part.

"I am profoundly impressed," said he, "with the fact that the structure of modern society is an essential unit, destined to stand or fall as such."

DISTINGUISHED PREACHER COMING TO PETERBORO.

The people of Peterboro will soon have an opportunity of hearing a prince of preachers and an outstanding representative of Canadian Christianity in the person of the Right Reverend Principal Clarence Mackinnon, D.D., Halifax, Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada. Dr. Mackinnon will preach morning and evening at the anniversary services in Knox Church on December 14th.

A correspondent in Regina sends a note on the recent visit of Dr. Clarence Mackinnon, to Saskatchewan. He says: "The Moderator came, saw and conquered the Synod of Saskatchewan. His resourcefulness is almost unlimited. He had the Synod in the hollow of his hand as he spoke on Wednesday evening. Select audiences were charmed by his messages at Assiniboia and Yellowgrass. The city of Regina he took by storm. Through the graciousness of His Honor Lieutenant-Governor Newlands and Miss Newlands, who entertained him while in the city, a number of the faithful were able to meet him in a social way. But the impact of his message stirred the whole city. Speaking in Westminster in the morning, in Knox in the evening, at an Armistice Memorial service in the afternoon, he made a real impression upon the throngs who heard him. His messages, like the strains of a symphony or the brilliance of a western sunset, are not reportable. The United Thanksgiving service on Monday morning — the shadow of coming events—brought inspiration to many hearts. The Church is stronger because of his coming. Thank God for our Moderator. He is come to the Kingdom for such a time as this."

LADIES' AUXILIARY G. W. V. A. BAZAAR

The Ladies' Auxiliary to the G.W.V.A. closed their bazaar last night, with an extremely successful sale and a good patronage during the two days it was held in the G.W. V.A. Hall. A handsome sum was realized for the charitable work to which the ladies devote their funds.

The bazaar was opened on Wednesday afternoon by G. N. Gordon, K.C., M.P., Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons. Mr. J. Abraham acted as chairman, and Mr. R. J. Devey responded for the ladies in charge.

The hall was effectively decorated for the occasion with bunting and paper streamers in bright colors, artificial flowers and bright red Christmas bells. Overhead were strings of gaily-colored pennants. The booths were arranged at either side of the big enclosure, supper was served at a long table at the south end, and afternoon tea at small tables, centred with cut flowers. Quantities of ferns and plants added to the general attractive appearance of the tea-room.

The president of the Auxiliary, Mrs. R. J. Devey, acted as general convenor. The rummage sale was in charge of Mrs. E. Houghton and Mrs. S. T. Harris. Mrs. B. F. McNeeley had the sale of dainty babies' wear and handkerchiefs, and guarded also "Mr. Pig," an aesthetic fat porker done in pale pinks and blues, with a twisty black yarn tail. This gentleman fell to the lot of Mrs. Millard when the time came to draw for his lucky possessor.

Dolls of many types, from woolly babies to aristocratic ladies, were at the counter which was in charge of Mrs. E. McKinstry, Mrs. E. Porter, Mrs. M. Peace and Mrs. A. Monks. A sleeping beauty in a white cradle, with a fully-equipped wardrobe of dainty things, was a notable member of the big doll family, and was won by Mrs. J. Lee. A pink "Ma-Ma" doll went to Mrs. E. Nixon.

At this table also were the pretty brass fern-holders, in bright and oxidized finishes, sold by a returned veteran, and across the way were the boxes of window-cleaner sold by another vetreran.

Candy in dainty holders was disposed of by Mrs. A. Fielder and Mrs. J. Mills. A novelty at this table were balls of popped corn dipped in raspberry juice.

A fish pond, decorated with orange and green paper streamers, was supervised by Mesdames Alliston, Little and Dainton, assisted by Miss Dorothy Paterson. In a secluded corner, fortunes were told by Mrs. R. Bugg and Mrs. R. Lynch.

The kitchen table, where all sorts of good things to eat were sold, including home-made preserves, pies, cakes and biscuits, with some warm-looking quilts and a quantity of tea-towels, was in charge of Mesdames Sharpe, Head and Thorndyke. A big pink and white iced Christmas cake was at this booth, and was won later by Mr. S. Whatley. The bacon here went to Mrs. A. E. Paterson.

Aprons and woollen goods were in charge of Mrs. C. Wiggins and Mrs. G. Chambers. The dining-room, where quantities of dainty things in linens and embroideries were displayed, was supervised by Mrs. W. Hughes and Mrs. J. Mackness. The guardian of this section was a huge tom cat, a real flirtatious gentleman with green eyes, blue jacket and red bow tie. He fell to the lot of Mrs. E. Houghton, and Miss J. Layfield won the ladies' silk scarf.

The bedroom, where dainty and useful garments were on sale, was in charge of Mrs. A. Clark, and Mrs. A. Cripps had the sale of boys' wear.

The supper was an extremely good one, and received much appreciative comment from its patrons. Mrs. J. Welsh was in charge, with Mrs. Austin in charge of the kitchen. Assistants were Mesdames Black, McLeod, Paterson and Kelsey.

Tea was poured on afternoons of the two-day sale by Mrs. A. Tamblin and Mrs. W. R. Morris.

A very enjoyable musical programme on Wednesday evening was provided by the orchestra of the Junior Vets, with Leslie Abraham directing.

Drawings for the prizes were made by little Berenice McNeely.

SHORT SKIRTS AND SHIVERING SHINS

By HEDDA HOYT.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Dec. 5. — (United Press).—In spite of New York's wintery blasts, skirts grow shorter and stockings sheerer. American women needed but one little hint from Paris that short skirts were actually in again and hems flew upwards, first along Broadway and then along the avenue. And do not believe for a minute that there is an age limit on skirt lengths! Even mother is shortening her hems while the ex-flapper considers two inches below the knee a moderate length.

Every woman is as old as her skirt length these days. Of course, there are a few respectable and be-spectacled standpatters who keep their hems within a two-inch range, regardless of the styles. When skirts are short they raise their hems one inch, conceding that much to style. Then there are a few women of the on-the-fence type, who linger along at a half pace, never exceeding the ten-inch hem limit, but the fashionable progressives accept the short skirt verdict with glee, as they carry out their slogan "the knee is the limit."

If one were asked for the most conspicuous style on the avenue today she would say "legs." For whether skirts are scant, or full and circular, they are an inconspicuous part of the scenery. Stockings are as sheer as ever, if not more so, and shoes this season are as lovely as the manufacturers can make them. The old woollen stockings and flat heeled walking boots of a season or two ago, are decidedly passe. They flew with the flapper and are no more. In their place we have satin shoes and gauze hosiery of a matching shade.

Since the majority of frocks, ensemble suits and coats this year are bordered in fur at the hem, the short skirts do not look as though one had run out of material. Fur borders give them a finished appearance.

One can not be too careful about the appearance of one's feet this season as short skirts demand good-looking footgear. Plain patent pumps with gunmetal hosiery are smart, and brown leather with matching hosiery is also popular. Shoes of cut-out type are seldom worn by the smartly gowned woman, however. Vamps are shorter, if anything, and heels are moderately high. Suede shoes have many followers and velvet is again being worn. For afternoon wear shoes made of a very light shade of brown satin are extremely chic, especially if brown be the leading color note of one's costume. Still a lighter shade called "blond" satin is worn for evening, although the silver slipper is still generally popular.

Eve at Evening.

Evening capes of vivid velvet are fully as popular and equally as pretty as the most costly ermine wraps which have had such a following. Many of the fashionables who gather nightly at the Metropolitan Opera House are wearing lovely velvet wraps in preference to those of fur. So many women in New York possess real or imitation ermine wraps that they are no longer conspicuously beautiful. Whenever a style becomes over-popular or is duplicated in cheaper material, it loses it's style value.

That's what put the seal coat out of vogue and that is what is happening to the ermine wrap. The majority of velvet wraps are in brilliant colors, such as red, coral, peacock, green, etc. They are generally made in cape effect, as this year's evening wrap is the sleeveless, wrap-about garment. Collars are either of fur or of ostrich of self-shade. Recently such combinations as green velvet with green marabou collars have been noted in the Metropolitan's audience.

Evening gowns are simple affairs, relying upon straight lines and lovely material for their chic. Most gowns are beltless, sleeveless and short-hemmed. Necklines are still rounding and cut rather higher in front than in back.

Hugh ostrich fans grow gayer in color at each performance of the Opera, and more women are carrying them this season than previous season. It seems one can't go to the Opera without a fan, regardless of the drafts which come through the doorways and give one the sneezes. The boxes are just one fan after another until one re-arranges the nursery rhyme to—

"Mother, may I go out tonight?"
"Yes, my darling daughter—
Hang your fan on the balcony box
And hold your head with hauteur."

HERRIOTT EMBARRASSED.

Says Conversation With U. S. Are Mere Exchange of Unofficial Views.

PARIS, Dec. 5. — (Canadian Press).—Discussion in Great Britain of the supposed official negotiations between the United States and France about the French debt have embarrassed the Herriott Government, and a formal statement declares the conversation between Ambassador Jusser and Secretary of Treasury Mellon are "mere exchange of unofficial views."

Bishop Henson's Views on Prohibition

LONDON, Dec. 5. — (Canadian Press).—"It is a great misfortune that the temperance cause has largely drifted into the hands of total abstainers," declared Bishop Henson, of Durham, yesterday. "It is a pity, too, that the churches have tied themselves to a policy which is not dictated by their religion.

"Modern conditions ought to be met by a new type of public house. I am opposed to State control of liquor, for political reasons. It might become an intolerable menace to individual liberty."

PRIZEFIGHTER

Al Brown, flyweight boxer, is 5 feet 9 inches tall, but weighs only 112 pounds. Yet he's a very hard hitter.

The average man of the same height and weighing no more wouldn't step into the prize ring for a mint.

Brown has self-confidence which, in fighting as in life, can counteract a lot of handicaps—provided you haven't too much. Yet better to have too much than not enough.

R. Elmhirst Returned From Toronto After Winning 3 Firsts and 1 Second.

KEENE, Dec. 5.—Mr. R. Elmhirst has just returned from Toronto where he had been racing his horse at Dufferin Race Track. Needless to say he had a very successful trip, winning three firsts and one second. The past season has been very profitable, Mr. Elmhirst being continually on the track since June. He is well known to all the lover of horses on all of the local tracks, alway a good horsemen and a good sportsman, these qualities going to make him one of the most esteemed drivers on the track in this part of Ontario. "Just Jack", the colt which has been very proinent during the past season was bred and raised in Otonabee. This being its first season of racing, making its first start on the Peterboro track, his placing for the season being 10 firsts and 5 seconds in 15 starts, all races being in fast company and competing against horses from all parts of the Province.

The Elmhirsts are all well known as lovers of horses and a race would not seem a race unless an Elmhirst was on the sulky.

Mr. Elmhirst has a farm outside of Keene and devotes his time to farming when he is not racing. The total placing of his 3 horses was 21 firsts, 15 seconds, 7 thirds, and 4 fourths.

The Keene Methodist church held their anniversary on Sunday and though the weather elements were not just what might have been desired, it did not prevent a large audience both in the morning and evening.

The service was taken by the Rev. Mr. Barrett of Stirling who preached in his usual forceful manner. Mrs. C. H. Byers of Colborne was soloist for the occasion.

Tuesday evening a fowl supper was provided by the ladies and needless to say every one did justice to the dainties provided by them. Following this a concert given by W. H. Cunningham and his talented orchestra, assisted by local talent was greatly appreciated. The proceeds amounted to $325.00.

Mr. Earl Doris, Frank Graystock and Peter Mather are in Ottawa attending the Winter Fair.

Mr. F. C. McRae, district agricultural representative is in charge of the team judging competition.

Winter Sports.

The Keene Skating Rink Co. are considering installing electric lights in the rink for the coming winter. Good lights have been badly in demand for a long time at the rink and the patrons will gladly welcome the news of the prospect for a better light.

Many of the men are looking forward toward using the besom and stane.

This year Keene has entered in the Tankard games. The games of this group have been scheduled to be played on the Keene ice.

Master Wm. Wedlock who has been convalescing in Nicholls Hospital for the past five months has returned home.

Mr. Melville Wood has purchased the residence of the late Hannah Nelson.

Mr. Wood moved his family this week.

Mr. Joseph Stewart, License Inspector was in the village on Tuesday.

Teams are busy gravelling the road leading from Keene to Ashburns' Point. Tourists going to the lake next summer will find a good road.

Mr. David Kempt is in Toronto this week.

HUTCHISON TELLS HOW IT FEELS TO WRITE NOVEL

HATES TO LEAVE HIS CHARACTERS

Believed That "The Clean Heart" Would be the Book

"The Clean Heart," or "The Cruelties of Life", which will be shown at the Royal theatre on Monday, is based on the novel by A. S. M. Hutchison, the English author. In writing recently of how an author feels for the characters he creates Mr. Hutchinson said:

"The odd thing is the way I actually feel sorry when the immense task of developing a novel is through. I have often thought it was mere affectation of authors to declare that they were quite moved when obliged to part with their characters and send them out into the world. But I have found it is a fact. One can't, I suppose, live with characters for years, school them, scold them, be patient with them, love them, without their getting pretty close to the heart. Anyway, I found myself genuinely disturbed when it was good-bye; good-bye to Wriford, dear old Puddlebox and jovial litle Essie in 'The Clean Heart.' I loved them one and all."

He had thought over the theme of "The Clean Heart" for years, longed to tackle it; but completed two other novels before he started it. He always thought it would "be IT—THE book." He took two years to write the story. In the fall of 1913 he thought he had evolved the final plan of the book, but five months later he had revised the plan to a drastic extent. "The Clean Heart" brought him tributes of a kind which no other of his novels has evoked. He has a natural aptitude for humor and perhaps the outstanding characteristic in his genuis for friendship. And the natural counterpart of that is that he hungers for friendship in return. It is this personality that he injects ino his stories and that is the secret of their appeal.

Percy Marmont is cast as Wriford, Otis Harlan as Puddlebox, and Marguerite de le Motte as Essie.

Murphy held in his formal report of the tragedy filed with the county clerk of courts yesterday.

Coroner Murphy from the start held to his view that Mrs. Sheatsley deliberately crawled into the furnace, although C. F. Long, chemist, and Dr. H. M. Brundage, pathologist, after a series of tests, said it was their opinion she met death outside the furnace.

THE THIEF OF BAGDAD

BY ACHMED ABDULLAH

CHAPTER IX.

Closely they crowded about the magic globe, watching tensely, while the Prince of India implored Doorga to cause the blessed miracle to materialize. Long and ardent were his incantations to the goddess. Not that it was really necessary. All he would have had to do was to say to the crystal: "Show me Zobeid!" and it would have obeyed immediately. But he saw here a good opportunity to impress the other two with the social importance of his divine relations.

So he chanted:

"Thee I implore, O Doorga, O Smashana Kali, O Mighty Ruler of the Lower and the Upper Firmament! Behold I am blood of thy blood and bone of thy bone! Hari Bol! Hari Bol! Hari Bol! Thou art the Mother of All the World, of men and women and cows and Brahmins, also of grief and laughter, of light and darkness and the Zodiacal Twins! Hari Bol! Hari Bol! Hari Bol! Grant me one boon! Show to me, thy blood relation, and to these two Princes by my side, though they are mere dust-created mortals, what Zobeid is doing at this very moment! Ho, Doorga! Ho, Devi!"

At once the magic globe clouded. Breathlessly they waited for a few moments while something—perhaps the very spirit of Doorga—came out of the nowhere and wiped over the crystal with a soft, gigantic hand, causing a great coiling of motley colors and interlacing of lines and curves to pour down into the golbe's opaque depths, then to separate, to co-ordinate neatly, and to picture Zobeid's apartment as in a miniature.

They saw every last detail of the apartment: the walls gemmed and inlaid; the floor of marble mosaic and covered with gold-threaded Teheran rugs; the carved Arab furniture; the great silver vases filled with a profusion of flowers, orange-flaming lilies, deep-red damask roses, and masses of feathery parrot-tulips of the most exotic shades, some purple, some white-spotted and stained with crimson and violet, others so dark that they seemed black. They saw the immense dressing-table with everything arrayed in proper order: attar holders, rose-water bottles, prepared sandalwood powder, saffron, and pods of musk. They saw, clustering about Zobeid's couch, a great company of men and women, amongst them her father, the Caliph of Bagdad.

The latter had his head bent on his chest. His shoulders seemed to be shaking with great sobs.

"What is the matter?" asked the Mongol with well-simulated excitement.

Then, as though in answer to his question, in the miniature of the globe the Caliph turned. They saw tears streaming down his face; and, as the crowd about the couch drew aside, they saw the Princess stretched out, pale, hardly breathing—on the point of death, there was no doubt of it.

Perhaps for the first time in his life, an idea not suggested by others popped into the Persian's brain.

"Quick!" he said, stepping on the magic rug. "Come with me! Let us fly to Bagdad! We shall be there within the hour!"

"Not at all! Has not our eminent colleague from Mongolia the mysterious apple which holds the secret of life and of death? Perhaps he will be able to save Zobeid—for me!"

"For me!" interrupted the Hindu.

"For myself! Just for myself personally!" came the Mongol's unspoken thought as he joined the other two on the rug.

"Hari Bol! Hari Bol!" shouted the cried the Persian.

"To the west—quickly!" commanded the Mongol.

The rug rose from the ground and cut rapidly through the air toward Bagdad, while down below, on the road between the latter place and Terek el-Bay, in field and village and desert and hamlet, the excitement and consternation of the people who looked up and saw the wondrous flying carpet, peaked to a hysterical pitch.

Hundreds fainted with fright.

Hundreds prostrated themselves and prayed to Allah and the Prophet Mohammed:

"Praise be to God, the Lord of the Worlds! The Compassionate, the Merciful, the All-Merciful, the All-Understanding! Thee we worship, and Thee we ask for help! Guide us in the straight way, the way of those to whom is Thy wrath nor of the erring!" The prayer was everywhere.

"The Day of Judgment is here!" shouted a Dervish. "Behold—up there flieth the Archangel Gabriel, calling the souls to gather before Allah's throne!"

"Allah!"

"Allah!"

Steadily the excitement grew.

Camels broke their halter-ropes and stampeded. Horses followed suit. Dogs became mad and bit stray human legs. Cats bristled their hair and scratched and hissed.

Seven old men and nine old women died with fear.

Nineteen small children became ill with colic.

A notorious drunkard gave oath that never again would he let fermented liquor touch his lips. A notorious Armenian usurer gave oath that never again would he charge over ninety-nine per cent compound interest a month. A notorious Greek banker gave oath that never again would he lie away his honor for the sake of oppressing the widows and the orphans. A notorious Jewish broker gave oath that never again would he cheat the simple Moslem villagers by palming off bad coins on them. Indeed, it was claimed later on that the flying rug did more toward the moral reform of certain foreign elements in Arabistan and the whole of Islam than a thousand laws and a thousand painful bastinados.

But if the people below were frightened, so was at least one of the magic carpet's passengers.

For, earlier in the morning, the Prince of Persia had breakfasted well though not wisely on half a stuffed goose, a large raisin cake drowned in whipped cream, a bottle of scented Shiraz wine, and a fine dish of prawns; and the jerking, rolling, sidewise motion of the rug as it sailed through the ether was conducive neither to his peace of soul nor to his peace of stomach. He groaned; shuddered; felt faint; turned a delicate pea-green; and he would have fallen overboard had not the Prince of India lent him a helping hand.

He was glad when, an hour later, the spires and roofs and painted domes of Bagdad came into sight, and when the rug flew low, entered the palace grounds, and at last sailed down the curved stairway into the apartment of the Princess.

Here, too, was excitement; surprise consternation; fear; question:

"What?"

"Where?"

"Whence?"

"Why?"

"How?"

"Well—we are here, aren't we?" replied the Prince of Persia, his pride overcoming his seasickness as he and the other two stepped down from the rug. "Here—to save the Princess!"

More hectic questions:

"What?"

"How?"

"When?"

Only the Moslem priests continued chanting their sobing, wailing liturgy since, given their vocation, they considered death much more important than life:

"Urhum yah Rubb! Khalkat, elathi ent khalakta; urhum el-mexakin wah el-juaanin, wah e'-ayranin! Urhum—urhum y'Allah . . ."

But the Mongol Prince interrupted their chant with chilly words:

"You are precious, my saintly friends. The Princess is about to regain life!"

"Kismet has decided that she must die!" exclaimed one of the priests.

"Maybe!" smiled the Mongol. "But I have decided that she must live!"

"How?" demanded the Caliph. "I have consulted the greatest physicians and scientists and professors . . ."

"And similar learned jackasses, I know," cut in the Mongol arrogantly.

"Sir!" cried the German professor, turning livid with rage.

"Sir!" echoed the French professor.

"Sir! How dare you?" echoed the other savants; and for once it seemed that they were thoroughly in agreement.

But the Mongol laughed.

"Behold this apple!" he said, holding high the magic fruit. "The greatest rarity on earth! With its help Zobeid will live again!"

It was a lucky thing that he was a Mongol, thus practical, rather coarse, basing his life on facts. For had he been Arab or Hindu or Persian, he would first have gone through half a hundred proper rites, would have observed due etiquette, and by the time he was ready to use the apple the Princess would have been dead for good. But, being a Mongol, a rough Man on Horseback in spite of his gorgeous Chinese robes, he calmly brushed aside learned men, philosophers, dry-nurses, slave girls, priests, sorcerers, and eunuchs; stepped up to the couch; slipped an arm about the Princess' shoulder without any ceremony, and scratched her slightly with the apple's purple point.

The effect was instantaneous. Zobeid sat up, her cheeks a healthy pink, her eyes clear and bright, her breath coming regularly.

"A miracle!" cried the Caliph, rushing up to her and kissing her hand.

"A miracle!" shouted they all; and so the death chant changed to a chant of thanksgiving while the Mongol Prince, using the excitement as he might a cloak, stepped up to Fount-in-the-Forest.

"Harmonious and exquisite thanks!" he whispered. "You have done your work well. I am grateful. Perhaps at a future date, after having been married to Zobeid for a few years, I shall reward you most splendidly by elevating you to the gorgeous rank, position, and title of my Number-Two-Wife. But—first of all—I must marry the Number-One-Wife—Zobeid!"

"Surely," replied Fount-in-the-Forest, "there can be no doubt of it now?"

"There should not be. But there might be. I believe in defeating Fate by preparing for the worst. For once my father told me that it is better for us to breakfast upon our enemies than to have our enemies dine upon us. So slip out of the palace, find Wong K'ai, and tell him to have my warriors in readiness. If I need them, I shall give a signal."

"What signal?"

"Three times I shall flutter my handkerchief from the window over there. Then let them attack town and palace with full, ruthless force. Ah!"—his narrow-lidded, oblique eyes gleamed, his teeth showed in a white, wolfish snarl, he was suddenly the Mongol, the rider, the raider—"let them spare neither man nor woman nor child! Let the ancient boast of our race come true—that grass will never grow again where once our horses' feet have trod!"

"Listen is obey, O Great Dragon!" said Fount-in-the-Forest triumphantly; and she kowtowed deepiy, and left the palace to find Wong K'ai.

The Mongol turned and joined the other two Princes who were busy answering the Caliph's questions as to the Why and Wherefore of the extraordinary happening.

"I am grateful—so grateful!" exclaimed the happy father, fondling his daughter's hand. "Grateful to all of you!"

"Do not forget that most of your gratitude belongs to this little magic apple!" suggested the Mongol. "With its help I restored life to your charming daughter. Life! The greatest gift in the world! Ah!"—he bowed deeply before the Caliph—"the greatest rarity in the world! I found it! Be pleased O delightful Zobeid, to accept it as a present!" He gave the magic fruit to Zemzem, the Princess' faithful Arab slave girl, and once more addressed the Caliph: "I have succeeded! I found and brought back the most marvellous treasure on earth! And now, according to your and your daughter's pledge, I claim her as my own—my bride—my wife!"

"Fair and just!" admitted the Caliph of Bagdad; but his words, as well as Zobeid's exclamation of horror and consternation, were swallowed in the Indian's angry:

THEATRES

AT THE REGENT.

"THE MAIL MAN."

For fast moving, gripping drama, "The Mail Man," which played at the Regent Theatre last night, exceeds anything that has been shown at local show-houses recently.

It has been truthfully said that Emory Johnson's genius becomes more and more evident in each succeeding picture. Some thought that "The Third Alarm," another F.B.O. picture, would be the apex of his sky rocket career. Now he springs a surprise by bringing out a production more cyclonic, more amazing, and more elaborate than any which he has yet directed.

Even the work of the beloved Ralph Lewis seems to have improved with age, during the comparatively short time that he has enjoyed the distinction of being America's foremost character actor. We liked him before. We loved him in "The Mail Man."

Unlike the average run of sickly sentimental plays which are now flooding the picture market, "The Mail Man" does not feature prominently any mawkish love interest, and yet we predict it will be highly successful. It gets its unusual romance through the undying love of father and son, evidenced in the work of Lewis, as the mail carrier, and Johnnie Walker, as the mail clerk, his son. The two make a great team, and their characterizations will be remembered.

The supporting cast includes Taylor Graves, Rosemary Cooper, David Kirby, Martha Sleeper, Josephine Adair and Hardee Kirkland. The simple, human note which these actors give "The Mail Man" brings it out in bold relief from everyday pictures.

AT THE ROYAL.

HOOT GIBSON AS COMEDIAN WELL LIKED.

The ever-popular Hoot Gibson with that big good-natured smile of his is back at the Royal with something different from his usual run of stories. 40 Horse Hawkins is genuine humour, requiring none of the usual mechanical upholstering to "put it across." Hoot plays stage driver, porter, hotel waiter, fireman, stage manager, taxi driver, and as he says, "I'd quit this town if I could break in ten men to take my place."

Helen Holmes is also in the cast, and does fine work.

It is true that "40 Horse Hawkins" goes into a past dim to most present day theatrical patrons but in the days from which this was dragged this fun machinery was taken seriously. It is melodrama of the "East Lynne" type, starving, freezing mother and babe, sneering villainess, scornful, cold-hearted villain, and all the rest of it. Such a company comes to the little village where Hoot is cast as the entire staff of the local hotel and the Opera House.

From the little village to New York in search of the struggling little actress of the company goes Hoot. He loves her and fears what may happen to her at the hands of the villain of the company. Finally after many yokel blunders, the village stage manager finds the girl while working as a "super" in her show.

Anne Cornwall, Helen Holmes, Richard Tucker and Edward Sedgwick, who also directed the picture, are Gibson's capable support.

ANDY GUMP AT ROYAL.

One of the funniest of the series of Andy Gump comedies, "Andy's Temptation," is now playing at the Royal. Andy, Min and Chester are on their way to Australia to visit Uncle Bim, and the fun takes place on board, and on a desert isle where they are shipwrecked. It's a good one.

AT THE CAPITOL.

With Harold Lloyd in his latest vehicle, "Hot Water," one of the humorous Aesop Fable creations, and a very funny comedy featuring Hal Roach's Rascals, the Capitol Theatre is offering its patrons three evenings of laughs and merriment. The entire programme, outside of the brief travel films, is full of fun.

The spectacled Harold is as comical as ever, in his own ingenuous style, in "Hot Water," a matrimonial mix-up, featuring the harassment of a new bridegroom by his stern mother-in-law, Jobyna Ralston is his pretty bride. The hero becomes involved in a series of incidents that have to do with a crowded street car, an armful of bundles and a real live turkey, won at the last moment in a draw. The turkey, with its white neck bow, is one of the innocent actors in a screaming street-car episode, and figures later also in the peculiar circumstances that convince the wide-eyed Harold that he has murdered his mother-in-law. The incidents that lead up to this conviction are cleverly managed, and the audience shieks with laughter at the plight of the harassed son-in-law, who swallows some "Dutch courage" in an effort to face his rampant mother-in-law, and then lugs in a bottle of chloroform to help him out. He also takes his wife and her family for a drive in his brand new car, and gets into some hair-raising accidents that reduce it finally to a pile of junk. The usual Harold Lloyd atmosphere of bewildered good nature is manifest in this picture, and adds much to the hilarity of the various situations.

Hal Roach's Rascals appear in "Saturday Morning," and make an excellent comedy. The two little black creatures are stars in this picture, and are extremely funny. A "poor little rich boy" and a group of gamins go "buccaneering" and get mixed up with a perambulating bear. The freckle-faced youngster with his wide grin, who is a favorite in these comedies, has a starring session with his big 'cello. They are comical little lads and act with all the refreshing, unaffected enjoyment of children.

A Pathe Review picture of the adventures of Thumbelina, a Sport Review, with some excellent photos of aquamarining, a hazardous sport, and a very good Felix the Cat adventure, in which the sprightly feline engages in the banana business, round out an excellent programme.

MINORS DENOUNCE BAN JOHNSON; ASSERT FAITH IN JUDGE LANDIS

President of American League Attacked by Convention at Hartford for Statement of Gambling in Pacific Coast League.

BLAMED FOR CHAOS IN BALLDOM

HARTFORD, Conn., Dec. 5.—In one of the stormiest sessions in its history, the National Association of professional baseball leagues, involving the 25 minor leagues in the country closed up its annual meeting yesterday by adopting resolutions denouncing Byron Bancroft Johnson, president of the American League, for his utterings in respect to gambling conditions in the Pacific Coast League, reiterating its faith and confidence in Commissioner Kenesaw, Mountain Landis, as head of organized baseball and by ignoring the proposed amendments to the major-minor agreement, knifed at the major leagues for their apparent attempts to dominate baseball in the minor leagues.

Flaying "a major league president,' the first resolution adopted for creating "doubt, confusion and a condition inimical to the welfare of baseball," and branding those who by "Harassment, guerilla tactics and otherwise' increase the perplexities of Landis, the magnates went on record as saying that baseball was in a "chaotic condition" because of what they termed were "unwarranted attacks".

Drastic Measure

The parting shot taken at President Johnson in the second resolution was characterized by some of the more prominent league presidents as the most drastic measure ever adopted by baseball to clean up the haze of suspicion against the national game created by Johnson's alleged insinuations. Harry A. Williams, president of the Pacific Coast League, whose circuit introduced the first resolution Wednesday which resulted in the general resolution adopted by the convention as a whole yesterday, said that Johnson's charges of gambling on the coast would be probed to the roots of their source and that he would be forced publicly to prove his charges or withdraw them.

The first resolution adopted was termed by one magnate as a shot at Johnson for his utterings concerning Landis while the second resolution dealing specifically with the Pacific coast situation, was adopted yesterday at a special meeting of the coast wheel.

LADIES' MERCANTILE

In the Ladies' Mercantile League last night at the Water Street Alleys, the C.P.C. Ladies, by virtue of their three straight wins over the Examiner Ladies, cinched the first half of the schedule. W. G. Rounds of Woodstock Offers Cup for Consolation Series.

WOODSTOCK, Ont., Dec. 5.—Frank Hyde, the Woodstock delegate to the O.H.A. convention and member of the executive has been authorized by W. G. Rounds, of this city to offer the Rounds Trophy as a prize to be awarded in connection with the new consolation series which it is proposed to established in connection with the Junior O.H.A. Series. For the last few years this trophy has been awarded in a consolation series between group winning teams which are eliminated in the semi-finals but Mr. Rounds feels that the new series will be more advantageous to Junior hockey and has asked Mr. Hyde to offer his trophy to the O.H.A. for this competition.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., Dec. 4.—Six hundred people turned out last night to watch the "Greyhounds" in their first practice at the arena and saw some promising material. All of last year's team, with the exception of Cain and Fred Cook, who have jumped to the pros., were on hand. Eddie Burk, the former St. Mary's junior, looked good and the two Tulloch's and Ferrone of last year Sault juniors, are also likely looking men. COBOURG AND THE DISTRICT

A Big Sale on Farm of Late Samuel Matthews—Curling Club Meeting.

COBOURG, Dec. 5.—A big sale was held today on the premises of the late Samuel Matthews, Provincial Road, East, at which the farm implements, stock, etc. and household furniture were sold. Mr. Matthews' sudden death a few weeks ago, while he was engaged topping turnips in the field made this step necessary. Mr. Matthews passed away while his young son and the hired help were taking a load of roots from the field to the barn.

Mr. Lawrence Cryderman, Durham East, has gone to the Windy City. He was the fortunate winner of a free trip to Chicago Fat Stock Show by his good work at the October Durham Junior Farmers Judging contest.

South Darlington U.F.O. met on Monday evening at Orono to make arrangements for holding a county meeting at Orono in the near future to discuss matters of importance to farmers.

Curling Club.

The annual meeting of the Cobourg Club, which was held at the Curling rink on Tuesday night, had the largest attendance and was one of the most enthusiastic yet held. It appears as if a much larger number of curlers than usual will be busy with the "besom and stones" this season. Mr. J. W. Bickle gave an interesting description of the meeting of the Ontario Curling Association which was held in Toronto.

Following officers were elected:

Hon. Presidents—W. J. Crossen, J. D. Hayden and J .W. Bickle

President—C. C. Gerin.

Vice-Pres—J. E. Skidmere.

Sec.-Treas.—W. L. Allen.

Representative to meeting on Ontario Curling Association—J. W. Bickle.

Executive Committee — J. W. Sprague, Charles McCallam, F. W. Baker, W. J. Tetford, M. Booth and A. W. Middleton.

Tankard and District skips were not elected at this meeting.

Hockey News.

The Intermediate and Junior O.H.A. hockey teams have secured the Fire Hall here for the purpose of trying out their skill and are busy practicing so as to be ready to enter the O.H.A. arena, when the season opens.

It appears now as if Cobourg will have a live inter-church league this year. St. Michael's has already organized and four or five other teams are expected including St. Andrew's, St. Peter's, the Trail Rangers and probably the Baptists. A meeting is called for next Monday night to discuss the advisability of dividing into Intermediate and Junior Interchurch groups.

ANNUAL MEETING OF BANK OF MONTREAL; BUSINESS SITUATION

Sir Vincent Meredith Expresses Belief That Canada Will Prosper—Country Offers Inducements to Immigrants Vastly Superior to Those of Other Countries.

Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor Points Out That Canada Must Put House in Order—People Must Insist on Government Practising Policy of Economy.

The 107th annual general meeting of the Bank of Montreal was held at the Head Office of the Bank in Montreal. The board of directors was increased from eighteen to twenty, the new positions, however, not being filled at the present meeting.

Sir Vincent Meredith, President, in his address to shareholders, said in part: "During the past year continued confused world-wide conditions have been a deterrent to business generally, yet, despite relative dullness of trade and the heavy burden of taxation imposed on financial institutions, I am happy to be able to say that we have earned our dividend and bonus."

Sir Vincent went on to say that he was satisfied that general conditions were improving, and he prophesied bright things from a business point of view in the future. He said that the past year had shown a better demand for steel in various forms, especially from railroads, that textile trades were gradually recovering from the slump, and that dealings in hides and leather have broadened.

Figures of Canada's foreign trade, he remarked, are encouraging. In the twelve months prior to October 31st the aggregate value of this commerce was $160,000,000 greater than in the preceding year. This, said Sir Vincent, was attributable in no small degree to the enormous grain crop of 1923. Flour products have always been the largest contribution to Canada's export trade, being greater than the combined value of all other commodities.

The other outstanding item in respect of export trade is forest products. In the seven months ending October 31 shipments of wood and wood products, including paper, declined in value about $18,000,000, as compared with the previous year, this decrease occurring in lumber and not in paper.

A favorable trade balance is shown by the excess of exports over imports amounting to $120,000,000,as compared with an excess of only $15,000,000 in the corresponding period last year. Foreign competition, which for some time past had been anticipated, is now being keenly felt in several basic Canadian products in neutral markets.

Immigration has been disappointingly small, and without increase in population, increase in production will remain obstinately slow. The problem belongs to other hands than mine, but I am convinced the day is not distant when this favored land of Canada will be sought by the surplus population of Great Britain and Europe, as well as by those thrifty classes who will here find opportunity for further improving their condition.

A Word of Confidence.

My last word is a word of confidence and encouragement. The interests of your Bank are more closely bound up with those of Canada than ever before, and unless Canada prospers, the Bank cannot expect the prosperity it should enjoy. I believe Canada will prosper. It offers inducements to immigrants vastly superior to those of other countries, which are at present endeavoring to attract citizens. It stands third amongst the countries of the world in natural resources. We possess half of the forest area of the British Empire; our mines produced in 1923 $214,000,000 worth of metals, and the surface is scarcely scratched. Canada stands second in the world in coal deposits. Her water powers are estimated at 18,000,000 horse-power, and she enjoys unexcelled transportation facilities. For those with some capital and a willingness to work, the cheap, rich lands of Western Canada offer a means of healthful subsistence, and, in time, a better competence than can be obtained elsewhere. Yet cardinal virtues must be practised, and I would again stress the necessity for hard work and economy, so often preached and seldom put into practice, and the need for immigration. Given these three things, I look forward with the utmost confidence to Canada's future.

General Manager's Address.

Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor, General Manager, in a review of the annual statement, said in part:

The increase in the number of depositors in our Savings Department has been greater in the past two years than ever before. I should like to emphasize in connection with the growth of these deposits that this Bank's services are at the disposal of every class of the population, and that we welcome those who with a small deposit wish to open a savings account.

The acquisition of The Molsons Bank, subject to formal ratification by the shareholders, will add to our organization the business of their 125 branches. Of these, 117 are located in the Province of Quebec and Ontario, and as the greater number are at points where we are not already represented, the result will be a valuable addition to our representation in these two provinces.

We shall welcome the clientele of The Molsons Bank, and can assure them that in the Bank of Montreal they will find a service fully commensurate with their needs combined with the courtesy and attention which they have a right to expect.

Although the wheat crop in Canada was this year less than for the season of 1923 by something approaching 200,000,000 bushels, fortunately for the farmer the price has advanced to about $1.65 per bushel from about $1.00 last year, so that Canada's gross income from this staple product should be about the same.

The increase in the current income of the farmers in areas which have yielded favorable crops has naturally been reflected in improved financial and business conditions in those districts.

This Bank, with a large volume of loans in Western Canada, has continued its tradition of fair dealing with its customers and has extended every assistance to those who have suffered repeated crop failures. We have followed a policy calculated to keep borrowers on the land, and considering the large number of individual loans, those cases have been comparatively few in which through the action of the debtors we have been obliged to resort to law.

Business Situation.

My view, in brief, of the situation is that business generally in Canada is unsatisfactory, but with some bright spots. This expression of opinion may not be popular, but it seems to be much better to look the matter square in the face than to allow ourselves to be led astray by popular delusions. That general trade is dull, to put it mildly, is no delusion. Many of our industries are running on half-time with diminished profits or no profits at all. Taxation is heavy to an extent which discourages new enterprises. The cost of living is high and our population in point of numbers is at a standstill, or worse.

These are the conditions as I see them, but I hope and believe we will emerge from our difficulties presently.

First and foremost I would say that there must be an end to the present apathy about public affairs. In my opinion, those who will not go to the trouble to register their vote in municipal, provincial and federal affairs should be penalized in some form for their indifference.

We all know that apart from the cost and effects of the war Canada's troubles are the accumulated result of what may be termed in mild and temperate language imprudence in affairs.

Good government is a hard problem in any country. No government can move faster in these matters than public opinion will permit, and upon the people lies the responsibility of voting for economy.

We, in Canada, have much to be thankful for. If this were a poor country our case would be a bad one, but we have riches in our forests, our fields, our fisheries, and in our minerals, also in our mighty water powers, and in the industry and ambition of our people.

We have a difficult situation on our hands, but let us not look back or waste time in mourning. Let us get together and, like a sane, capable, and industrious people, put our house in order.

PARKDALE VICTORIOUS.

Defeated De La Salles and Aura Lee Won Game From Canoe Club.

TORONTO, Dec. 5. — (Canadian Press).—Parkdale and Aura Lee turned up winners in a Junior S.P.A. double-header at the Arena last night, the Sunnyside Club defeating De LaSalle 3 to 0, while the Toronto Canoe Club was Aura Lee's victim by a score of 6 to 4. The Parkdale-De LaSalle affair was fast and the checking was very close, but there was little or no team play. Aura Lee and Toronto Canoe Club played great hockey, and both will be hard to beat in their group games.

Brig. Gen. Odlum Buys Vancouver "Star."

One of the leading newspapers of Western Canada, the Vancouver "Star," has at the head of affairs Brigadier General V. W. Odlum, C. B., C.M.G., D.S.O., a nephew of a Peterborough citizen, Mrs. W. B. Shirk, 223 Dublin Street. Brig. Gen. Odlum was a former manager editor of the Vancouver World, of twenty years ago and is a rising man in the political life of Canada.

The Vancouver "Star" has had a meteoric rise to popularity in the newspaper world. In the middle of March last, Charles E. Campbell, the publisher of the Vancouver "World," sold out his interest in that paper. In May, he with a W. C. Tunks, business manager of the "World," took over the plant of the "Tribune," of Fargo, N.D., and transported the entire plant to Vancouver, 2,000 miles away. Nine days after the plant had arrived, it was in operation, and was turning out the Vancouver "Star."

In June, a month after its inauguration, it had a daily average circulation of more than 21,000, which increased in July to 22,000, and is still growing.

Six weeks after the presses began to roll, Mr. Campbell sold out to Brigadier-General Odlum.

SKELETONS MAY TELL STORY OF LOST COLONY

800 Skeletons Found in Cave Near Benhams, Virginia.

JOHNSON CITY, Tenn., Dec. 3. —(United Press).—Eight hundred skeletons, believed to be the remains of a white colony massacred by the Indians about 1590, have recently been discovered in a cave near Benhams, Virginia.

The discovery was made by S. C. Dyer, scientist of Mohawk, Tennessee, who believes the colony were friends of Virginia Dare, the first white child in America.

The colony came from England and landed on Roanoke Island, Virginia, July 22, 1587, with John White as governor, according to history records. Virginia Dare was born there, August 18, 1587.

Governor White went back to England to obtain supplies and on his return in 1590 found Roanoke Island abandoned. No trace of his colony was found except the word "Croatan" carved on a tree. Historians deducted from this that the colonists were either massacred or, during White's absence, moved to a place called "Croatan."

The skeletons, according to scientists, are about four hundred years old. They are, according to the Smithsonian Institute, the first trace of the lost colony and the length of time the bones have been in the cave and the date of the colony's disappearance correspond very closely, another fact lending authenticity to scientist's belief.

Some scientists believe the Indians herded the entire colony into the cave and left them there to starve.

Souvenir hunters carried away so many skulls soon after the discovery that it has been impossible for scientists to determine by measurements whether they are of Mongolian, Caucasian or Ethopian races. There is a possibility, scientists say, the skeletons might be those of Cherokee Indians.

The number of the skeletons corresponds with the number of members of the colony, according to records in histories.

Y.W.C.A. GIRLS WIN.

Defeated the Normals 34 to 20 in Fast Game Last Evening.

On the Y.W.C.A. gym. floor last evening before a large crowd of spectators, the Y.W.C.A. basketball team won a fast game from the Normals by the score of 34 to 20. At half time the score stood 12 to 9 in favor of the winners, but teh Normals put up a great fight in the last half but failed to overcome the small margin of points the "Y" girls had over them.

The two teams were very evenly matched and combination play kept the game exciting throughout. Miss Margaret McIntosh acted as referee.

To-night the following games will be played:

To-night at 8 o'clock the Bell Telephone and Otonabee clash.

Monday night at 7 o'clock the Woollens meet the DeLaval.

Wednesday night at 7 o'clock, the Quakers meet the Western Clock.

DE LAVAL GUESTS OF THE Y.M.C.A,

About 125 Men From Different Departments of Factory Guests at "Y."

Through the courtesy of the officials of the Y.M.C.A. the men of the De Laval Company were entertained on Wednesday evening from 7 p.m. onward. The entire building was thrown open to them and sports and games of all kinds were indulged in. Approximately 125 men availed themselves of this excellent opportunity of an evening's entertainment and at the close all agreed that it was an occasion long to be remembered.

Great interest was taken in the Bowling Competition when Teams from the various Departments met in combat. The highest game went to the factory office team, as also did the high single. Some of the men had never seen a five pin alley before and some of the ten pin champions had never recognized one, but all the same some good bowlers were found and with practice and coaching many good teams could be mustered. Besides being used for the Tournament the alleys were in constant use until a late hour.

Under the leadership of Jim Downing, games of many kinds were fought out in the Gymnasium while many former athletes looked on from the balcony. Many games were played using teams but the main attraction was a Basketball game, Factory vs. Office, and which was won by the former by a score of 28 to 27.

The teams were as follows:

Factory

Galbraith, D.; Kennedy, G.; Ward J.; Miller, B.; Miller, G.; Ashmore, J.; McKinley, W.; Downing J.

Office

The pool balls clicked merrily throughout the evening and some few with a decided "Cockney" accent were playing a queer game which we think is called English Billjards.

A special feature of the evening was the 8-piece Orchestra under the able leadership of Mr. A. Nichols, which blew themselves to fame. The Orchestra also accompanied the sing song which all enjoyed immensely. The De Laval comedians Chas. Cole and Ed. Markham did their stuff in their own inimitable way and everything on the programme went off without a hitch except the favorite solo by a certain superintendent which was cancelled owing to a previous engagement with the refreshment committee.

After refreshments, Mr. G. A. MacDonald in a pleasing speech voiced the thought of the entire gathering in thanking the officials of the Y.M.C.A. for the pleasant evening's entertainment. Mr. G. H. Roper replying assured everyone that it was as great a pleasure to the officials as to the guests.

CANADA NEEDS MORE ONENESS

Rev. O'Conner-Fenton Tells Kiwanis Club of World's Greatest Need.

LACK OF UNITY.

Kiwanis luncheon held to-day was marked by the report given by Secretary Jack Jeffries, on the Kiwanis Winter Fair, showing that the net proceeds to go towards making a Happy Christmas for every needy child in the city, amounted to $785.78.

Chairman Jack Marshall remarked on the work done by the club and the great success of the Fair. "We are now in a financial position to carry out our plans of making this Christmas a happy one for everybody," said the chairman.

Rev. O'Connor-Fenton of Norwood, spoke on "the Underlying Oneness in the World." Dividing the word into three parts, Saneness or common sense, charity and a taste for truth, the speaker said that these are the parts of men that count, and that our dominion should be composed of men with these qualities.

Are you satisfied with the present educational situation of our province? There is no need for compulsory education after a child has passed the entrance examinations. Elementary science and mathematics are needed if a pupil has a taste for them, but if not there is no use trying to teach them. Pupils who are forced to go to the Collegiate against their will are only wasting their time. We are flooded with persons who are performing something they are not capable of doing. If there was absolute oneness in the world we would know when we are getting a doctor or a dentist to do something for us that he was up in his work and know what he was doing. As things are now we may hire a doctor to do something for us and we do not know whether he is any good or not.

Speaking on charity the speaker said that he was delighted with the work which the Kiwanians of this city were doing in this line. If we want to reach oneness we will have to work in the same line that you are doing at present. A city or a province must be built of the people who are in it and there is no use in doing charitable work if you are doing so with a cold heart. These little things which you are doing for others mean a great deal to us all.

Having a particular liking of acknowledging things for what they are, is a distinct taste for truth, said Mr. O'Connor-Fenton. If you have this taste for truth along with charity and sanity we are almost certain of obtaining oneness among us all. Oneness is when everybody would fit together like a puzzle and then stick together and work for each other. It would be a great thing if we were able to say that Canada is built of unity itself.

Kiwanian J. J. Turner in thanking Rev. O'Connor-Fenton, remarked on his great ability as a speaker, and the able manner in which his address was given.

CRUSOE

"Robinson Crusoe" continues as the world's best seller, though it was first published 205 years ago. The Bible, of course, ranks first.

"Robinson Crusoe" is printed in 33 languages. Its tremendous popularity is sometimes explained by pointing out that it is, in effect, a history of civilization. Its strongest appeal strangely enough, is to people who'd like to get away from civilization.

"KIDNAPED"

At an auction in New York a man pays $10,000 for the original manuscript of "Kidnaped," by Robert Louis Stevenson. The author must have turned over in his grave. We didn't know what he got for writing this book, but for "Treasure Island," his masterpiece, "Young Folks" magazine paid him only $3 a column. Today he could name his own price. Our generation has the money, but not the Stevensons.

INQUEST UNNECESSARY.
Coroner Dr. T. W. H. Young this morning investigated the circumstances surrounding the death of Samuel Bickell, 384 Burnham Street, who was found dead in bed last evening by Constables Thomas and Puffer, after notification by neighbors, alarmed at the man's non-appearance for several days past, had been given the Police Department. After the thorough investigation, Dr. Young decided that the man had died from natural causes and that no inquest would be necessary.

MERGENTHALER.
A memorial tablet to Ottomar Merthenhaler is placed on the house where he was born, in a German village. His name doesn't mean much to a reader. But he invented the linotype machine which took the place of typesetting by hand and made large newspapers possible.
If he had led an army that butchered a few million people, everyone would know his career in detail. The machine invented by Mergenthaler will, along with typewriter, paper mill and pringing press, put the military butchers out of business eventually. It's largely a matter of education, and about as easy as teaching an elephant to do "fancy work."

MALE 'VAMPIRE' ADMITS DEATHS MAY BE THIRTY

Gruesome Revelations in the Trial of German Charged With Murder of 27 Youths.

FORGETS NUMBER.

Shouts Wildly to be Beheaded—Involves Accomplices in Knowledge of Crimes.

By O. D. TOLISCHUS.

HANOVER, Germany, Dec. 6.—The darkest depths of human depravity were revealed at the opening of the trial here Thursday of Fritz Haarman, "human vampire," on charges of murdering twenty-seven boys and young men.

Laughing most of the time, weeping in between, Haarman freely tells of his murder career, with as little concern or show of regret as if his victims had been rabbits, instead of boys.

President Judge Boeckelmann asked:

"How many did you kill in the street?"

Haarman answered:

"Oh, four or five."

"Why did you kill them?"

"They made me angry."

Profits From Clothing.

When the judge asked Haarman whether Hans Granz, accused as an accomplice, knew of any of the murders, Haarman replied:

"He might have seen a dead one or so with me. I think it was in Frank's case, he opened the closet in my room and there was the dead body inside."

The prosecution believes Granz got some of the victims for Haarman and that his profits came from the sale of the clothing worn by the murdered boys. The Judge asked:

"Did Granz insist on you committing any of the murders?"

Haarman replied:

"If I let one escape, he called me an idiot. When he came into my room he always searched for something. When I asked him what he was looking for, he said he was searching for corpses."

"Fine Breeches" Prize.

Then the Judge suggested:

"In Red Row Granz is supposed to have come in just when you were cutting up one of the bodies."

Haarman replied:

"Yes, that was the Hanappil case. But Hanappil was still alive then. Granz beckoned me out of the room and said the man had fine breeches.

"After half an hour Granz came back. I had just killed Hanappil. The boy lay dead before me. I had just severed a leg from the body. I quickly shoved it under the bed and then let Granz come in.

"He remarked that the air was awful and asked for the clothing. Then he said we must go over the corpses."

But while admitting the murders, Haarman vigorously denied his previous minor criminal record. As the list of the sentences he had served was read, he shouted:

"That is all a swindle."

Demanded Own Death.

Early in the day Haarman created a stir in the court room by shouting:

"I want to be beheaded. I want to be rid of my tortures."

The two hundred persons in the small room were startled, and opera glasses were levelled at the prisoner.

The Judge shouted:

JERSEY POLICE IN LIQUOR PLOT

Accused of Aiding Bootleggers to Land $50,000,000 Worth.

NINE ARE HELD.

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—Nine police men, including the Captain of the Hudson County Boulevard Police and two Weehawken Police Lieutenants were arrested Thursday on bench warrants issued by County Judge Charles M. Egan at Jersey City, charging them with a conspiracy to violate the Hobart act, the New Jersey liquor enforcement law. They were released in bail of $10,000 each.

The policemen are accused of protecting bootleggers, who are said to have landed more than $50,000,000 worth of liquor from harbor craft at the foot of Baldwin Avenue, Weehawken, within the last few months.

A meeting of the Home Guard organization of 150 members, which served during the World War, was held in Public School 3, Weehawken to organize a waterfront patrol to prevent the further landing of liquor.

The arrest of the policemen resulted from charges made by John Dorsey a salesman, and Thomas Heagney, a fireman, both of Weehawken who said they had been threatened by bootleggers with pistols who were loading liquor from lighters to motor trucks at the foot of Baldwin Avenue under the protection of police in uniform. When they made a complaint at Weehawken Police Headquarters, they said the Lieutenant on the desk told them to keep away from the foot of Baldwin Avenue. Dorsey and Heagney estimated yesterday that more than $50,000,000 worth of liquor had been landed there from lighters.

Several weeks ago the nightly traffic was interrupted by a quarrel between the bootleggers and two Federal Prohibition Enforcement Agents, said to have been stationed at the pier. The bootleggers charged the Federal agents with having tipped of a band of hi-jackers, who stole the contents of two motor trucks filled with liquor, after a hold up of the vehicles.

"EVERY INCH A QUEEN"

QUEEN MARY

A recent picture of Her Majesty, who of the members of the Royal family, by the way, made the deepest impression upon John J. McGraw, manager of the New York Giants. The New York team and the Chicago White Sox played a series of games in Europe and incidentally the town cost the clubs a deficit of $20,000.

Some of the players on their return declared themselves for the Duke of York as a "real regular fellow", but Mc. Graw bows to Queen Mary.

"She looked a queen every inch," he asserted to New York newspapermen, "and she seemed to pick out the essential points of baseball considerably faster than King George, who proved to be a wonderful fellow and very observant. The game is flourishing in and about London. A league of ten clubs is already in existence."

DELICIOUS SALAD.

A delicious salad dressing for head lettuce is made by adding two tablespoons of relish or chopped sweet pickle to a cup of cooked salad dressing.

JUDGE HUYCKE HEARS APPEAL

Reversed Judgment of Magistrate and Allows William Eastland His Liberty.

Yesterday at the County Jail was staged the last scene in the prosecution of James Akey, William Eastland and Harold Gibbs, when William Eastland was allowed his liberty.

His Honour Judge Huycke was appealed to from the conviction of Police Magistrate Langley, fining Wiliam Eastland $400.00, or in the alternative three months in the County joil, and conciscating 4 cases of whiskey and 19 cases of beer found on his premises in North Monaghan. Mr. J. A. O'Brien, who appeared at the trial for Mr. Akey and Mr. Eastland, when Mr. Akey was acquitted, appealed the conviction of the Police Magistrate to the Judge, and the Judge allowed Mr. O'Brien's appeal. His Honour in giving his judgment reversing the judgment of the Magistrate directed that Eastland, who had started on his three month's term in jail, should be released, and that the liquor which was confiscated should be returned, and further directed that the security for costs, which had to be put up by the appellant, (Eastland) should be returned to him. Inspector Stewart's prosecution of this case now results in the exoneration of the three accused. His Honour in his judgment, held that Mr. O'Brien's contention that the liquor was not kept for sale by Mr. Eastland was correct.

MUSSOLINI WINS VOTE FROM ITALIAN SENATE

Government's Internal Policy Approved on Division of 206 to 54.

ROME, Dec. 6. — Adopting the same persuasive attitude he used a few days ago in the chamber of deputies, Premier Mussolini gained a vote of confidence Friday in the senate, the vote being 206 to 54, with 35 abstentions, on a resolution approving the government's internal policy.

As in the chamber so in the senate, the premier's principal line of argument was that most of the things for which the government was criticized now were in process of being corrected, and he was sure the Fascist government was better able to continue this change to normality than any other political element in Italy.

SOARING POUND STIRS TALK OF GOLD STANDARD

Return to Gold Basis Would Greatly Help World Reconstruction.

MAY BE SLOW.

Inter-Allied Indebtedness an Obstacle—Last Stages of Sterling's Advance Most Difficult.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—The progress of pound toward parity and the prospect of settlement of the difficult inter-allied debt problem have revived discussion concerning how soon Great Britain may hope to return to a gold standard. The subject is being convassed by bankers and leading financial papers.

At present gold may only be exported under government license, and unless the Government should decide otherwise this embargo continue to the end of 1925 when it lapse and the country automatically returns to a free gold market system and a gold standard. It is generally assumed that such return to gold standard would be equally advantageous and desirable on both sides of the Atlantic but opinion by no means is unanimous concerning the best policy to adopt. The effect of British war indebtedness payments to the United States on the exchange is admitted to be an important factor in the situation.

Pay U. S. Debt First.

One prominent banker, John F. Darling, even advocate in preference to an early return to gold standard that Britain should employ her gold reserves in repaying at he tearliest possible moment this indebtedness to the United States. On the other hand, Sir Felix Schuster, another leading banking authority in giving evidence before the government committe on industry and trade advocated an early return to the gold standard as the best means of contributing to lowering the cost of foodstuffs and raw material.

The trend of opinion seems to be in favor of hastening the return to a gold standard, but it is generally recognized that this is impracticable until the problem of inter-allied indebtedness is out of the way.

The Economist, the leading financial review, assuming that the United States is as anxious as Great Britain for a return to gold standard says:—"If this hope can be realized a contribution to world reconstruction will be made second only in importance to the Dawes scheme. Germany already is nominally on a gold bascs she will be followed soon gold basis if Great Britain resume a by the great dominions and other countries, among whom Holland, Switzerland and Spain are likely to be first."

Prices On Rise.

Like other financial authorities, the Economist recognizes that until Great Britain has a favorable trade balance the rise in the price of sterling must be more or less artificial, but the newspaper is convinced that commodity prices in America now are set for a rise, and that this rise will tend to reduce the margin of price levels as between the two countries and thus help stabilization of exchange.

The Economist thinks that the last stages of the pound's advance toward parity will be the most difficult and suggests there should be some sort of co-operation between Britain and the United States to assist the movement by hastening the date for removing the embargo on gold exports. It believes the banking and commercial community in Britain is ready to support the Treasury and Bank of England in any move having this object in view. It concludes:—"The wisest Americans realize that unless the world resumes the gold standard the American monetary and banking system is in danger of breaking down because of America's power for absorbing gold is not unlimited."

BARON WRANGEL'S DERELICT SQUADRON SEIZED AND DISARMED BY THE SOVIET

Fleet of Seventeen Vessels Have Been Sequestered in French Waters On African Coast For Four Years —Crews Dispersed.

BIZERTA, Tunis, December 6.—The squadron of General Baron Peter Wrangel, who was at the head of the anti-Bolsheviki campaign in the Crimea, which has been lying in the Bizerta Roads, since December, 1920, was disarmed yesterday.

All the guns, torpedo tubes and other armament were removed from the two battleships, two cruisers, nine torpedo boats, and four submarines comprising the squadron.

Part of the crews were dispersed while the remainder have been given shelter in the French naval barracks at Sidi Almez.

Soviet commission recently was approached by the Moscow government to come to Bizerta and demand the return of the war craft to the Soviet government. A threat by Admiral Exelmans, port admiral of Bizerta and commander-in-chief of the French naval forces in North African waters that he would have the Russian commission thrown into the sea if it called on him, resulted in the Admiral being removed from his post by the French government.

BRITAIN AND FRANCE IN ACCORD CHAMBERLAIN AND HERRIOT MEET

Friendly Discussion in Heart to Heart Talk on Minor Problems.

MEET AGAIN SOON.

Chamberlain Addresses Note to Press Appealing For Defense of Entente Cordiale.

PARIS, Dec. 6.—The basis for the better discussion of big pending problems was laid Friday during a conference between Austen Chamberlain the British secretary of state for foreign affairs and M. Herriot, the French premier. Incidentally the conference disposed of some minor questions at issue between Great Britain and France.

They avoided, however, any painful subjects, such as inter-allied debts, as far as could be learned last night. It was the first meeting between the statesmen. M. Herriot later, in seeing Mr. Chamberlain off for Rome to attend the sessions of the council of the league of nations in the Italian capital, arranged to continue the conversation on board the train when Mr. Chamberlain is returning to England. The French premier even promised to go to London later, if necessary.

Spoke in French

Mr. Chamberlain's knowledge of the French language did away with the necessity of an interpreter, so that the statesmen had a long heart to heart talk. The nature of discussion naturally became known through their comments. Both, however, said they were highly pleased and announced that they had agreed on all pressing matters such as a decision for maintaining embassies in Constantinople and the adoption of harmonious policies at the Rome meeting of the council league. Mr. Chamberlain for his part promised to support the appointment of a French man as chairman of the league of nations committee for the investigation of German armaments.

Appeal to Press

Before leaving the foreign minister who wrote a statement in French for the press of the two countries which he addressed directly to the newspapermen.

The statement was as follows:—"We ministers and politicians work our hardest to confirm and fortify the bonds of friendship which unite our two countries by the memories of common glory, common suffering and common interest. 'Lend us your powerful aid! Do not emphasize the differences which may arise from time to time between the best of friends. Be rather interpreters of our two nations, one to the other. Let the British press make it its duty to explain the French viewpoint. Let the press of France, on its side, make it its motto to explain the British viewpoint to its compatriots. Make yourselves, on either side of the channel, defenders of that entente cordiale which must always unite France and Great Britain. You will thus help us effectively."

THE ANNUAL MEETING AND ELECTION OF OFFICERS OF L.O.L. NO. 1175 WILL BE HELD ON MONDAY DECEMBER 8TH. AT 8 P.M. ALL MEMBERS ARE URGENTLY REQUESTED TO BE PRESENT. REFRESHMENTS WILL BE SERVED. 1d 13 44633

BLINDED BY BOOZE

WILLARD MACK

Playwright, actor and one of Broadway's favorites, was stricken blind for ten days by bad liquor. "Our party bought the liquor, that nearly meant the loss of my eyes, from a concrete crew over in Jersey. The reason it hit me harder was that I drank more of it. This episode has taught me a lesson. I am lucky that I pulled through with my sight. One of my eyes is still impaired." One of his recent successful movies was "Little Robinson Crusoe" which he wrote for Jackie Coogan.

GIRL SUBNORMAL.

Attempted to Poison Companion—Assumed by Children's Aid.

WOODSTOCK, December 6. — On the recommendation of Lloyd Ecker, agent of the Children's Aid Society, Mildred Potter, the 12-year-old East orra school girl, who attempted to poison a school mate, a little over a week ago, was yesterday committed to the Children's Shelter by Magistrate Patterson, as a ward of the Society.

Mr. Ecker reported that the mental examination showed the girl was of a sub-normal type of mind and he said he had no criminal charge to lay against her. He also reports that there was no truth in the story that she had placed arsenate of lead in the well at the school.

When questioned by Magistrate Patterson as to her intention when she placed Paris Green on the lunch of a school girl she admitted that it was her intention to kill her.

RUMANIAN ARMY PLANS OBTAINED BY SOVIET GIRL

Beautiful Russian Prima Donna, Soviet Spy, Won Love of Airman.

FLEW TO MOSCOW.

Thirty-five Others Lured Into Plot and Arrested—Opera Singer.

By KARL H. VON WIEGAND.

BERLIN, Dec. 6.—A romance in real life, with operatic touches of love, spies, treason, detectives, stolen army mobilization plans, escape by aeroplane and all the elements of a melodramatic scenario episode, are revealed in a despatch from the Roumanian capital.

Madame Blona Iveni, a favorite and beautiful prima donna of the royal opera, suddenly disappeared from Bucharest. Her whereabouts could not be ascertained in spite of the utmost efforts of the Roumanian secret service.

Flyer and Plane Gone.

On the same day that Madame Iveni disappeared, her alleged admirer, Lieutenant Brailu, of the aerial branch of the army and closely connected with the general staff, took one of the fastest planes at the Bucharest flying field ostensibly to try for a record flight.

When he had not returned towards night, inquiries were made which brought an answer from the Roumanian-Russian border that a plane showing no flag or nationality had crossed at great speed in the direction of Moscow.

Investigation quickly revealed the mobilization plans for the Roumanian Army in the event of war with Russia, which had been prepared by the General Staff with the assistance of the French, had been stolen and evidently taken to Russia by Lieutenant Brailu.

Singer a Russian Spy.

It developed, so it is claimed, that the beautiful prima donna was Russia's chief secret service agent in Bucharest and that Brailu, madly in love with her, was an easy tool and drew others into the plot. Thirty-five arrests, including several army officers in responsible positions, have been made, reports say.

Madame Iveni is reported now to be in Italy.

Owen Sound Interested and Will Vote on Project.

OWEN SOUND, December 6. — A grain elevator with a million bushel capacity, may be erected in Owen Sound in 1925. The project, which has been under consideration for months has reached the stage where a bylaw will be submitted to the ratepayers on January 1st.

The plan is that Owen Sound shall build the elevator and sell it to the company in which Owen Sound capital will be largely interested.

COLD ROAST PORK

A delicious way to serve cold roast pork is to slice the meat rather thin and arrange on a platter and pour over it two-thirds of a cup of French dressing to which finely chopped celery hearts, minced parsley and a chopped onion have been added. Let stand an hour or so before serving.

PRIEST WAGES WAR ON POLICE

Twelve Men Indicted on a Charge of Rum Running and Corruption.

GET BOOTLEG KING.

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(Canadian Press).—Twelve men have been indicted in Weehawken, N.J., as the result of wrathful warfare waged by Rev. Father Bennett, Weehawken, against the political corruption in general and rum-running in particular.

As the result of a single-handed investigation begun by Father Bennett, the Hudson County grand jury returned indictments against the Weehawken safety commissioner, ten policemen and "Billie" Griffin, called the "Bootleg King."

According to affidavits, the Weehawken police force has engaged in the rum-running trade. It is also declared that signals were flashed from the tower of the township hall in Weehawken to policemen stationed along the water front. They in turn flashed other signals to inform incoming rum ships that it was safe to land.

All the men named in the indictments with the exception of the police captain and Harry Stearns, safety commissioner, are under arrest.

The priest has begun an investigation in the face of repeated threats against his life.

WEST LAGGING.

WINNIPEG, December 6. — Canadian Press. — The weekly trade report of the Canadian Credit Men's Trust Association, Limited, states:

Halifax: Wholesale trade conditions are being well maintained but owing to the mild season the retail trade is not as active as expected.

St. John: Wholesale trade continuing satisfactory; retail trade good; collections fair.

Groceries—Conditions fair for the past week, due no doubt to the coming holiday season. Collections are generally fair in all lines.

Toronto: Wholesale trade under the stimulus of colder weather a certain amount of activity has been shown. Retail trade has shown some improvement during the past week, apart from Christmas shopping, which has now commenced. Industry—There continues an optimistic spirit and in some cases a few advances are shown.

Winnipeg: No material chage reported over the previous week in wholesale lines. Retail trade showing considerable activity due to the Christmas shopping at this time. Collections are fair.

Regina: Wholesale trade fair to steady improvement in some lines. Retail trade—Fair to good. Collections fair for this time of the year.

Saskatoon: Wholesale trade is improved. Retail trade normally quiet for this time of the year due to poor crops in the immediate district; collections fair.

Edmonton—Both wholesale and retail trade holding fairly steady. Considerable activity in retail trade due to the Christmas season.

Vancouver: Wholesale trade reports dry goods fairly good; hardware good; groceries fair and boots and shoes a little quiet.

CAMPBELLFORD AND DISTRICT

Rebekahs Meet and Spent a Social Hour—Personal Mention.

CAMPBELLFORD, December 6. —The Loch Lomond Rebekah Lodge, No. 248, met in their lodge rooms on Thursday night.

A number of candidates were admitted as members. The degree work which was put on by the local team, was exemplified in a very efficient manner. At the close of the evening a social hour was spent and refreshments served. The Rebekahs have arranged to have a company from Belelville to give a play on Tuesady night in the Regent Theatre.

Social Evening.

The annual social evening under the auspices of the "Leaders" class of Christ church, which was held in the parish hall on Friday night from half past seven to half past eleven, was a great success. The young men of the class sent out invitations to the young people of the town and church to meet with them. About a hundred were present. Mr. J. H. Bygott was chairman, and with a few remarks announced the programme as follows: Vocal solo, Miss H. Bonnycastle, two violin solos, Mr. R. C. Searles, accompanied by his sister, from Frankford; vocal duet, Miss Isabel Bygott and Bernard Blute; vocal solo, James Benor. Each one contributing to the programme received an encore to which they kindly responded. Mrs. F. Daly was the accompanist for the evening and also played for the dancing.

In the basement there were card tables for those who wished to play. Between each item of music on the programme there were dances. The committee for the social evening were: James Benor, convenor, Misses Elsie Smith, Helen Bygott, Reta Baker, Kay Bygott, Messrs. S. Clegg, H. Beatty, J. Free and M. Sargeant, Jr. Mr. J. Benor on behalf of the class, thanked those present for their attendance and also those who assisted in the programme. Lunch was served at half past ten. The "Leaders" Class, named because it is the oldest class in the Sunday school was organized in 1918, with James Benor as its first president, and Mr. C. H. Harris its first mentor. Other presidents since were: J. Free, S. Clegg, H. Beatty, R. Patrick, A. Thrower and J. Ray, its present president.

The later mentors were Mr. Bailey and Rev. G. C. Clarke, the Rector, its present mentor.

About five years ago this class was organized as a C.S.E.T. class.

The Leaders' Class are planning to have a similar social evening every two weeks. All had a very enjoyable evening and when half past eleven came the evening's entertainment and dance closed, as that is the rule to close at that hour.

VICTIMS OF ANAEMIA.

Need New, Rich Blood To Restore Health and Strength.

It is an unfortunate fact that nine women out of every ten are victims of bloodlessness in one form or another. The girl in her teens, the wife and mother, the matron of middle age—all know its miseries. To be anaemic means that you are breathless after slight exertion. You feel worn out and depressed. You turn against food and often cannot digest what you eat. Sleep does not refresh you and when you get up you feel exhausted and unfit for the day's duties. If neglected anaemia may lead t consumption.

You should act promptly. Make good the fault in your blood by taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, the most reliable blood enricher ever discovered. These pills purify bad blood, strengthen weak blood, and and they make good blood and as the condition of your blood improves you will regain proper strength, and enjoy life fully as every girl and woman should do. The case of Mrs. Mary Trainor, Perth, Ont., shows the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in cases of this kind. She says: "I had not been feeling well for some time and had been grad ally growing weaker. I found it very hard to do my housework; had severe headaches and was very pale. I took doctor's medicine for some time, but it did me no good. I was growing weaker and used to faint and take dizzy spells. In this condition I began to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and after a time found they were helping me. I continued their use until I found the troubles that afflicted me had gone and I am once more enjoying good health and strength."

Yo can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50c a box from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

FARMERS HOLD DANCE.

Two Hundred People Took in the Event in Victoria Hall.

APPENDICITIS.

Operation Not Always Necessary When Scientific Bathing Is Resorted To.

Many hundreds of operations for appendicitis have been avoided through the "J. B. L. Cascade."

Scientific internal bathing brings positive results. Mr. Jas. McLaughlin, 91 Evanston street, Winnipeg, writes: "I bought a 'J.B.L. Cascade' for the cure of a bad case of appendicitis. My doctor told me I must have an operation. I had spent more than $50 in doctor's bills, but the Cascade completly removed in a few days every trace of pain. I eat and sleep well, have regained my former weight and am now in perfect health."

A mother from R. R. No. 1, Leamington, writes: "About two weeks ago our son took sick with cramps in the bowels so badly he could not move. Our doctor gave him hypodermic injections and ordered him to the hospital to be operated on. Before doing so however I induced him to use the 'J.B.L. Cascade,' and in less than a week he was up and around, and has been well ever since. It also cured me of severe headaches and constipation. I cannot praise the Cascade enough. It certainly is a wonderful invention."

If you have constipation, headaches, appendicitis, or feel languid, and not just right, don't drug yourself, but bathe internally. The "J.B.L. Cascade" is being shown and explained at the Warne Drug Company.

Ask for free booklet, or write Tyrrell's Hygienic Institute, 181 College street. No obligation to you whatever.

MALE 'VAMPIRE'

"Put them down. This is no theatre."

Then the court ordered that all those in the court-room be searched for weapons, because reports had reached him that friends or relatives of some of the victims had threatened to cheat the headsman by slaying Haarman in court.

Out of the silence in the room as the search was being made, suddenly rang Haarman's voice:

"Hurry it along. I would rather be dead than go to the insane asylum.

"My father was a swine. I hate him. My last word will be to curse him. He always beat me."

Then, bursting into sobs, he went on:

"But I loved my mother. She was a good woman."

As the names of victims came up, Haarman admitted fourteen murders of the twenty-seven charged to him. But he said the number might actually be as high as thirty. The prosecutor said he believed Haarman could eventually be connected with ten other slaying that have never been solved.

"No," Haarman said, "do not charge them to me. Those skulls are from someone else."

Special police precautions are being taken at the court-house in view of the excitement the trial has created.

DICED CARROTS

OMEMEE BEEF RING HAD GOOD SEASON

Thirty-eight Members Shared in Beef Sold at Cost—Omemee News.

OMEMEE, Dec. 6.—The members of the beef-ring association held their annual meeting and nowhere could be found a more satisfied group of men than those who attended. It requires twenty members to compose a ring but many do not care to take a full share a week, which would be over twenty pounds and therefore they divide their share and for the past season there were thirty eight members. As they all feel it is the only way in which to get their meat at first cost they decided to reorganize for another year. The President being, Mr. D. Weir, butcher; S. D. Vaughan, and the Secretary Treasurer, Mr. O. G. Williamson.

The heaviest animal contributed to the ring this season weighed 560 lbs. and the lightest, 370 lbs. making the average weight 445 lbs. The first six contributors were allowed from 1-2 to 1-4c per lb. more for their animals as the cost to produce in early spring is greater than later on in the season and they were therefore given a refund when the season closed.

News of the sad death of Mr. James Rainey, a former Omemee boy, arrived in town on Friday. Deceased spent his childhood days in Omemee, later moving with his parents to Western Canada, and afterwards to Victoria, B.C., where he had charge of a garage. He was instantly killed when the car which he was driving went over an eighty-foot embankment. He leaves a wife and family, also his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Rainey, and two brothers, Thomas and George, to mourn his loss, to all of whom much sympathy is extended by those in Omemee who remember them.

Mrs. Thos. Eggleston was a business visitor to Lindsay on Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Mitchell and daughter, Miss Emily, accompanied by Mr. S. J. Markey and daughter, Miss Helen, attended "The Thief of Bagdad" in Peterboro on Tuesday evening.

LEADERSHIP OF LLOYD GEORGE IS TEMPORARY

Only While Asquith Continues Absent From the House of Commons.

LONDON, Dec. 6 — (Canadian Press Cable.)—Political gossip appears to be united in the belief that David Lloyd George holds the leadership of the Liberal party only during the absence of H. H. Asquith from the House of Commons. No credence is given to the rumor that Mr. Asquith will accept a peerage. It would be regarded as much more graceful if instead the Conservative party offered him an easy opportunity of returning to the house of commons where his presence would be welcome to every section. Even the boisterous members from Clydesdale accord respect to the aged Liberal leader.

The Saturday Review thinks that much more interesting than Lloyd George's position in the house of Commons is his position in the country. There have been few more swift and complete falls from influence than that of the little Welsh statesman who apparently has lost, at all events for the moment, the power to fascinate the crowds. The Review believes that the former premier will regain his place in popularity only if he can espouse some great cause, but at present he seems bankrupt of ideas.

CHEAPER POWER.

The demand of representative farmers at a conference between the Agricultural Inquiry Committee of the Legislature and Sir Adam Beck that more generous assistance should be given by the Government to the extension of power facilities into rural districts, is one that is easy to understand and to sympathize with.

The greatest boon that the farmers of Ontario could be granted would be the supplying of electric energy at terms within reach of the average farmer's pocketbook.

It is difficult, however, to justify the request that the Government should pay the whole cost of secondary lines as well as 50 per cent. of the cost of primary lines.

The present bonus of 50 per cent. on both primary and secondary systems is a concession of much benefit, and as Sir Adam Beck has announced that new schedules are being prepared and that in the near future there will be large sized reductions in the rates charged rural customers for Hydro power, the farmers of Ontario will be in a very favourable position.

It is claimed that Ontario already leads the world in the provisions it has made for supplying its rural districts with power, and with reductions in the rates charged promised the farmer user of electric energy should feel that he is receiving considerate treatment, especially in view of the fact that the late Garmers' Government did not go nearly so far in the direction of cheaper power for the agriculturalists of the Province.

THE PAPER SITUATION.

Louis Blake Duff, editor of the Welland Tribune and Telegraph, in a recent speech declared that every time a car-load of Canadian pulpwood goes across the line into the United States a good Canadian has to follow it to get a job.

The statement may be somewhat exaggerated, but it at least calls attention to a situation about which the average Canadian does far too little thinking.

Canada is shipping her pulpwood across the border in huge quantities to be turned into paper in United States mills.

There is no United States duty against Canadian newsprint, but there is against book paper, the latter amounting to a cent per pound and 10 per cent.

The effect of the latter is that American mills are being supplied with all the Canadian raw material they want to make kinds of paper that Canadian mills are not allowed to sell across the line except by scaling a high tariff wall.

It would be interesting to note what would happen were anything like an embargo on Canadian pulpwood to be advanced.

Would it have the effect of opening the United States market to all varieties of Canadian paper?

At all events, new mills are being built in the United States—a large one at North Tonawanda, N. Y., is the most recent—that might perhaps have been established in Canada had there been an embargo on Canadian pulpwood or had Canadian paper free entry to the United States.

THE WORLD MOVES!

Radio pictures have been sent across the Atlantic Ocean, from London to New York and reproduced on this side. The whole operation for each picture was about 20 minutes. Queen Alexandra, the Prince of Wales, Premier Stanley Baldwin and President Coolidge were among those whose pictures were reproduced Sunday in one of the most amazing achievements known to radio science.

Those who mourn the passing of miracles may well pause to reflect, says the Border Cities Star. The radio picture test was only one of many in this prolific "miracle age." Sound has been turned into light rays for the deaf to "see;" light has been made to shine around a corner; a man has flown at the speed of 260 miles an hour; a specialist in New York has directed by radio a critical surgical operation in a Middle States town; diabetes, leprosy, cancer and tuberculosis have been successfully treated; opaque walls have been made transparent; a boat has been "sailed" without sails; mercury has been turned into gold, the ancient dream of the alchemist. And now we not only scribble notes to each other across the water, but we indulge in the old parlor recreation of "looking at snaps."

Moving picture transmission by radio will come next, say enthusiastic inventors. Their prediction seems reasonable, for the same laws govern both movies and "stills." Imagine yourself reading of a big event in London and seeing it in the pictures the same evening! But that has no particular significance; the change in world relations is the important factor. Diplomacy is due for some drastic changes, with this lightning speed creating the demand.

Meanwhile, it is a curious reflection that one of the first uses to be found for radio pictures will be in tracking down criminals. It will not be the first scientific achievement popularized by the police.

DAYLIGHT SAVING.

The electors of Belleville, voting on a plebiscite taken in connection with the municipal elections on Monday, emphatically rejected a proposal to adopt daylight saving during the summer months, the vote being almost 3 to 1 against the plan.

It is altogether probable that if a similar plebiscite were to be taken here the result would be much the same as in Belleville.

And yet it is significant that in the cities that have adopted daylight saving as a matter of course for the past five or six years, there is little opposition to the retention of the system.

Toronto, Ottawa and Kingston, for example, are firmly in favour of summer time, and in St. Catharines where a vote was taken on Monday there was a majority of over 1,100 in support of the policy.

In fact, the people of St. Catharines are so much in accord with the principle of daylight saving that we find the Standard deprecating the system of voting upon the question every year, pleading that the time, trouble and expense might well be spared in view of the majority that has been recorded in favour of the policy.

"Daylight saving carried yesterday by over 1,100 votes," says the Standard. "It has become practically a settled policy for the city, and the more summertime is experienced the greater and wider is the endorsement thereof. It is true that there was no determined attempt to defeat the measure this year, but the result would have been the same in any event. The only fault with daylight saving is that it is not Province or Dominion-wide."

Daylight saving as an issue is dead in Peterborough, with no coherent demand for it here, yet it is evident that the places that have had opportunity to study the policy for some time are permanent advocates of summer-time.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The message of President Coolidge to Congress not only indicates that he is endeavouring to carry out the economy plank in his election platform, but it also will give Canadians reason to think that we on this side of the line have not hit our stride in reducing the cost of government.

The United States Budget shows a decrease of nearly $60,000,000, very substantial reductions having been made in the appropriations for most of the large departments, including the Interior, the Post Office, the Navy and War Departments, with only one increase of any size, and that necessitated by the building of many new roads, requiring more money for the Agricultural Department.

Here in Canada we continue to employ half as many more civil servants than were on the payrolls of the country in 1914—a small army of something over 55,000.

Canada's standing army consists of some twenty-five hundred soldiers and her navy of three small training vessels, yet something over 250 permanent officials are looking after these arms of the national defence.

Just to show how we stand it may be pointed out that whereas the Department of Trade and Commerce spent $110,781 in 1914, the last fiscal year showed an expenditure on this department of over $750,000, and the Department of the Interior, which cost about a million dollars a year before the war, has increased its appropriation by 100 per cent. and employs 40 per cent. more officials than it did 10 years ago.

There is no use in looking at this matter through political spectacles, nor arguing about the respective responsibilities of the present Government or its predecessors.

The simple fact is that our neighbors, never noted for economy, have found a method to lop large pieces off the national expenditures, and that after six years of post-war administration, we have made no such progress toward normal cost of government.

TRADE CONDITIONS.

From virtually all sections of the country information has been received to the effect that retail business in the hardware, drygoods and grocery lines has reached a much higher volume than was anticipated a month ago. Not only are weather conditions more favorable than for some months, but there is more money available for spending than at any time since the beginning of the depression period. The present volume of sales indicates that a larger holiday trade is in prospect than has been realized since 1920.

Three factors definitely contribute to this rise in the volume of retail trade. As stated, there is more money in the country available for distribution; there is a greater normal seasonal demand for goods, and thirdly, business optimism is on the increase. With regard to the first, the present season may be termed Canada's pay day. Last year agriculture in Canada yielded a gross revenue of $1,253,679,400. This year, the indicated yield is at least $100,000,000 greater. Of last year's total, field crops were responsible for $899,166,000. Nearly a billion dollars comes into Canadian hands during a short period following the termination of the harvest, and we are now in this period. It might be said that this method of an annual pay day is not good for year-round business; it undoubtedly has its objections. The significant fact, however, is that with the increase in dairy farming and stock raising the dividend is being more evenly distributed throughout the year—a decidedly healthy tendency.

Since the beginning of business recovery in the United States and the return of the Canadian dollar to par, there has been a marked tendency on the part of the United States business and industrial firms to take a greater interest in Canada both as a market and as a source of raw materials. The recent publication by that United States Department of Commerce of a special issue of "Commerce Reports" on Canada is indicative of this trend. A more substantial indication is the fact that a number of American firms are sending their representatives into various part of Canada for the purpose of building up business, and the number of enquiries from the United States with regard to Canadian goods and markets is said to have increased substantially. Our market in the United States, moreover, is gradually expanding despite tariff barriers. During the year ending with October we sold in the States, $428,271,877 worth of goods, as against $422,383,373 for the previous year.

While the industrial sections of the Maritime Provinces are still relatively stagnant, both the farmers and the fishermen are enjoying a wave of moderate prosperity. It is estimated that the cash return from the Lunenburg fishing fleet will exceed those of last year by a quarter of a million dollars as a result of improved prices. The total farm revenue of the three Maritime Provinces last year was $98,195,000, and according to present indications, this year's returns will be much nearer $125,000,000 if not in excess of that figure. In the lumber industry firmer prices have resulted from increased demand on the part of United States buyers. Rural conditions in general are very satisfactory.

While some controversy still exists with regard to the advisability of returning to the gold basis, it would seem from present indications that no action is likely to be taken in the immediate future in this connection. The view expressed by the Bank of Montreal in their annual report seems to reflect the attitude of the Government that the step should not be taken until there is ample assurance that parity of exchange can be maintained without artificial support. The view is expressed that the present unusually favorable trade balance arises out of the large exportable surplus of grain in conjunction with reduced imports of raw materials which resulted from the depressed state of industry. This suggests a return to our normally unfavorable balance of trade as industry recovers, especially in view of this year's small grain crop.—Financial Post.

TORONTO LIVESTOCK

TORONTO, Dec. 5.—This week witnessed the first real strength since before midsummer and prices advanced twice during the week brought the increase up to 50c a cwt. on all butchers except the veriest common stuff. The market would have probably responded before this had it not been for the heavy supply of butchers' cattle from the West accompanied by heavy shipments of common unfinished butchers.

Rogers & Maybee were unable to get all they wanted for export this week, although they advanced their prices in accordance with the general market. For export steers on Monday they paid $6.75 to $7.50 a cwt., and on Thursday $8 to $8.25 was paid, but these prices were for cattle that would qualify for Christmas beef. Short keep steers for overseas cost on the average $6.25 a cwt.; heifers were $6.25 to $6.75, and choice export cows were $5 to $5.25 a cwt. This firm will want 1,300 cattle next week and shippers having the right kind will no doubt get fair consideration on Monday's shipment as all are wanted for that day.

The result of this week's business is to bring choice handyweight butchers up to $7 a cwt., good butchers to $6.50, mediums to about $5.75 and common cattle really worth slaughtering to $4.50 and $4.75 a cwt. Plain common butchers are good only for about $3.50 a cwt.

Butchers' cows were not up to the same extent as other butchers, but there were advances here. Choice fat cows are $5 to $5.25; good cows $4.25 to $4.50; mediums, $3.50 to $3.75, and common cows, $3 to $3.25 a cwt. Canners have been decidedly strong and not in sufficient supply and prices are ruling from $2 to $2.75 a cwt. The demand for export bulls has strengthened this market and heavy finished bulls are $5 a cwt.; good butcher bulls, $4 to $4.50 and bolgona bulls $2.75 to $3.50 a cwt. bought for the week at advances of 25c cwt.

Calves are up a dollar a cwt. for the week. The supply has not been too heavy and real choice calves have brought 12 cents a pound; good calves 10 to 10½ cents and medium to 9 cents. Common calves are 5 to 7 cents and good grassers 4 to 4½ cents.

There has been a strong market for lambs and they are up 50 cents a cwt. Good light eyes and wethers are 13 cents and choice bunches are half a cent a pound better. Sheep are also firmer and nice handyweights sell at 7½ cents.

Hogs are the only weak live stock this week and these are down 25 cents a cwt. to $8.50 a cwt. f.o.b. The packers figure on heavy shipments at this special time of the year and take advantage of the occasion. Salesmen do not look for any further drop and expect a recovery when the big run is over.

JAPANESE TEA.

BENSFORT, December 4. — A pretty Japanese tea was held at the home of Mrs. Harry Nicholson, on Tuesday afternoon, December 2nd, at Bensfort (South Monaghan), for the Missionary Society of the Bensfort church, with the president, Mrs. Wilbert Wood in the chair.

After the secretary's reading of the minutes an inspiring address was given by Rev. Patterson of Frazerville upon prayer. He spoke of the necessity of prayer, the urgent call for daily prayer, and the close communion it gave to God and man.

Rev. Patterson closed his inspiring address by assuring his hearers of the great help attained through prayer.

Mrs. Walters also gave an address which was much appreciated.

At the conclusion tea was served in the tea room, which was prettily decorated with Japanese lanterns and Japanese umbrellas, carrying out the missionary spirits.

Mrs. Wilbert Wood assisted by Mrs. (Rev.) Patterson presided at the tea table, which was prettily decorated in tulle, chysanthemums and Japanese china.

Mrs. Nicholson was assisted by her sister-in-law, Miss Mary Nicholson, also Mrs. Vernon Friedly, and Miss Marjory Emberson, and little Alberta Friedly, who were kowned as Japanese girls in Japanese kimonas, who added real charm to the affair.

MR. Rodman Wanamaker, of Philadelphia, son of John Wanamaker, the famous retail merchant, is a very wealthy man, but he realizes that life insurance gives his fortune a stability which it might otherwise lack. Already insured for more than $6,000,000, he is reported to be seeking to increase that amount to the limit of the policies procurable at his age The limit of the insurance obtainable by Mr. Wanamaker if all existing companies issued their maximum on one life is estimated to approximate $7,200,000. Mr. Wanamaker has instructed his agents to "get him the limit."

More and more is life insurance being recognized as the soundest investment a business man can make. In life insurance the policy steadily increases in value, and should the assured die it is available in full to his heirs in spot cash. Mutual Life Insurance is insurance at actual cost because the entire net profits of the company are paid to the participating policyholders.

MILK
Versus MEDICINE

"Three thousand dollars for milk and only one hundred dollars for medicines, was the sum expended last year in the interests of the small girls and boys at the Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire Preventorium," according to a report which appeared in the Toronto Daily "Globe" of a recent date.

"Thousands for milk, little for medicine." This significant statement should go a long way to induce parents to encourage their children to use more milk and lessen their doses of medicine. The result would be revealed in the brighter eyes and rosier cheeks of the youngsters. Some one has said:

"If I had a cow that gave sweet milk,
I'd dress her in the finest silk,
I'd feed her on the choicest hay
And milk her forty times a day."

YOUTH OF DOURO DISBAND Y. P. A.

Changed Officers Four Times in as Many Months—Can Not Agree.

DOURO, Dec. 6.—After four changes of officers in as many months and after several stormy meetings the Young Peoples' Club, have disbanded. It is disgraceful that, where there are as many young people as here and where so much entertainment and profit might be derived from a Club that the young people cannot agree. To the credit of the majority it must be said that there are less than half a dozen trouble makers. If the others had the courage to bar those from their membership things would go along smoothly. There is too much fault-finding and jealously among a few in this community.

Douro is to have a new industry. Mr. James White has purchased a pair of silver-tipped black foxes and is starting a fox farm. Mr. White formerly specialized in Holstein cattle but last spring sold them off on account of lack of help. Mr. White is a very enterprising farmer and we predict success for him in his new venture.

The light snow-fall of two recent nights made conditions ideal for fox hunting and parties of Peterboro sportsmen made the most of the opportunity. They are said to have had splendid luck. Farmers' wives who have had poultry taken by the wily foxes will not regret to hear that some of them have been captured.

Word has come to friends here of the death in Detroit, Mich. of Mr. Wilfred Kennedy, who has been seriously ill for sometime.

Deceased was a brother of Mr. John Kennedy and Miss Catherine Kennedy of Douro.

Mrs. George Heffernan of Lakefield, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Allen (North) is seriously ill with pneumonia.

Mr. Harry Fitzgerald, son of Mrs. Anne Fitzgerald, is seriously ill with pneumonia.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Clancy and children and Miss Lucy Noonan of Hastings were recent Sunday visitors of Mrs. Mary Fitzgerald.

Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Manley of Otonabee and Mr. and Mrs. W. Brown of Toronto were recent Sunday guest of Mr and Mrs. Ross Staples.

Miss Bessie Cavanagh was a recent visitor with friends in Peterboro.

Mrs. Maurice O'Brien spent a week with her daughter, Mrs. M. Leahy in Peterboro.

Most of the local schools are preparing for Christmas concerts. A central concert will be held in Town's hall.

Mrs. H. Judd of Toronto is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Tucker. Mrs. Judd has recently undergone a serious operation for appendicitis.

Mr. John O'Brien (South) has purchased a car.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

CHURCH UNION

The ways of Anti-Unionists

Verily the ways of anti-unionists are wonderful and past finding out! Here is an item which could be duplicated from many quarters. A certain layman is invited to preach in a Presbyterian church. He is known to be an anti-unionist, but the minister (who favours union) trusts him to take no unfair advantage of his visit (or visits.) It is a gentleman's understanding based on the law of honour. If a man be invited to the house of a friend he will not violate the sanctities of home life or friend ship. To do so would be treachery. He would suffer hurt and loss rather than do that. But what happens in this case? The anti-union ferment is working. Men's brains are turned. The gentlemanly understanding is forgotten. The laymen (Mr. Jas. Dutton) takes to himself two other elders from St. Paul's Session (H. B. Cowan and J. Hutchison) and invades the parish of his friend. There is no invitation, (even their second visit is unauthorized.) They cannot plead that it is a private, friendly visit. They are all ardent members of the anti-union association. They are out on purely propaganda work. Their fiery zeal is that of partisans. They pass by the minister's door and round up certain of the office-bearers and in a private hour they hold a solemn conclave closing the meeting with prayer!

Verily the Pharisees are not all dead! We know what Christ said about them. In common morality how is such conduct to be rated? Is it fair play The gentleman in question owes his introduction to the congregation to the minister. He uses it to undermine his friend. Is that playing the game? We Britishers are supposed to love fair play. I leave it to the judgment of fair minded men if that sort of thing can be justified. "Mine own familiar friend in whom I trusted hath lifted up his heel against me."

But that is not the sum of the offence. It is not merely personal. It is contrary to the law of the church. It is quite unlawful for members of our session to try to meddle with the affairs of another session. These men cannot plead that they came in a private capacity. As members of St. Paul's session, and an anti-union society, they collaborated to come together and to interview and influence members of another session. This is certainly a violation of the law of the church and of the eldership. Surely men who are so keen to preserve the Presbyterian Church should be subject to its law.

In Centreville there was an agreement: "No meddling from either side—" "No outside interference or influence". And yet these men "butt in". Had there been a union committee at work in the congregation and secret meetings held to propagate union, there they might have pleaded provocation. But there was no provocations. The office-bearers had arranged for a meeting at which both sides were to be heard. But these parties were not content with that.

Worst of all, in the case of Mr. Dutton, it is a direct violation of the finding of Presbytery to which he was a party. It was agreed unanimously that there be no outside interference in any congregation, from either side, without the full consent of the minister and session. Mr. Dutton has to answer to Presbytery for that.

Yes, the ways of anti-unionists are deep and past finding out. God Almighty cannot bless such underground methods. They savour of politics at the worst. The cause that is so sordid may succeed for a time, but only for a time.

OBITUARY.

MRS. ROBERT HANBIDGE.

(Contributed.)

There passed away at her home in Otonabee on Saturday morning, Nov. 29, Mary Jane Deyell, beloved wife of Robert Hanbidge, in her 77th year.

Her death was unexpected, having enjoyed her usual health until a few days ago, when she contracted a severe cold and was unable to resist it.

She was a daughter of the late William Deyell, one of the early pioneers.

Of a family of nine, three are still living, two brothers, William of Lindsay and Samuel of Peterborough, and one sister, Mrs. James Ruth of Peterborough.

She inherited from her parents qualities of heart that contributed toward a noble life. She had a loving disposition and was ever thoughtful for the good of others.

On Dec. 6, 1871, she was united in marriage to her now sorrowing husband, and to him she was a true helpmate for over half a century.

In early life she joined the Bible Christian Church and her home was ever a resting place for th e pioneer ministers of those days. There she ministered to their need and comfort through her kind hospitality. She was a life-long resident of Otonabee, her present home being within one mile of the place of her birth.

There is left to mourn her loss her partner in life, who through advanced age and failing health has been confined to his home for almost a year. Four children also survive her, Mrs. Thos. E. Sargent of Peterborough, Mary at home and George B. and Mrs. G. Herbert Taylor of Otonabee. One son, W. J., predeceased her eighteen years ago.

The funeral was held on Monday, Dec. 1, from her late residence to the Little Lake Cemetery. The services were conducted by the Rev. R. Banforth of Mark Street Church. Many friends and neighbors gathered to pay their last tribute to the one that was beloved and respected by all that knew her.

Vitality

Health is Our Greatest Asset

Neuralgic Pains

Mr. Thomas Honey, Brantford, Ont., writes:—"When I began taking Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, I was so nervous that when I picked up a cup of tea my hand would tremble like a leaf. I could not sleep well, could not remember things, and there were neuralgic pains through my body. After taking seven boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, however, I am in perfect health."

Weak and Nervous

Mrs. Maurice Naugler, Middlewood, N.S., writes:—"After confinement I found myself very weak and unable to gain up strength. I tried different doctors without benefit. My heart seemed to be affected, and I was so nervous that I would not stay in my own home alone. A relative told me it was all due to my nerves, and that I should take Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I followed her advice and am very glad I did, because I can now go to bed and sleep well and am much stronger in every way."

Heart Trouble

Mr. John Tucker, Elimville, Ont., writes:—"I suffered for a great many years from nervousness, heart trouble and neuralgia. I could not sleep at all, and had frequent headaches. My appetite also became poor and I was bothered with indigestion. I finally commenced using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and found it the best thing I ever tried. It relieved me right away and I soon got better."

Never Felt Well

Mrs. H. N. Tardell, Harrowsmith, Ont., writes:—"My nerves were in a very bad state, and for nearly six months I did not know what it was to have a good night's rest. I could not eat, and never felt well. I heard about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after taking it for a few days I began to feel better, and soon was able to sleep well at night. My appetite also returned, and I felt stronger and better, and after taking three boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was quite well."

In order to maintain health vitality must be kept at high water mark.

We must have vitality to accomplish the day's work—vitality to fight off disease—vitality to enjoy life.

Lack of vitality is usually attributable to exhaustion of the nervous system.

There is not sufficient nerve force in the system to control the vital organs and supply the energy consumed in the act of living.

We are slaves to our hopes and fears. Always hoping that to-morrow or next week we may be feeling better.

But nervous ailments do not right themselves. From the first warning symptoms such as sleeplessness, irritability and indigestion there gradually develops neuritis, neuralgia, sciatica, rheumatism or some form of paralysis.

The sooner the building-up process is set in action the better, and there is nothing like Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to restore the depleted nervous system.

Whatever may be your special ailment you may be sure that it poisons your mind and works against your success and happiness.

Rest and sleep will help greatly in the restoration of the nerves but nutrition is also necessary and this is best supplied by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

From experience in many thousands of cases we know what you may expect from the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. But it is up to you to carry out the treatment regularly and persistently until your whole system is filled with new vigor and vitality.

It will take a little time but you are the one who is to benefit and it is surely worth while to make an effort to be strong and well and to realize again the joy of health.

Could Not Sleep

Mrs. Wallace Burwell, R. R. No. 7, Thamesville, Ont., writes:—"For several months my nerves bothered me so that I simply couldn't get to sleep for two or three hours after going to bed. I took five boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and ever since I have no difficulty in sleeping. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is certainly a boon to nerve sufferers."

Nervous Breakdown

Mrs. Sidney S. Corey, Butternut Ridge, Kings Co., N.B., says:—"I had a nervous breakdown after a severe attack of the FLU. I could not sleep for terrible headaches, nervous twitching of the nerves and muscles, and numbness of the hands. I was so nervous I could not lie still. This lasted for nearly a month and a half. I tried medicines from doctors but did not seem to get much help. On the advice of a friend, I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and after taking three boxes I was completely relieved."

Nervous Exhaustion

Mrs. Jane Hooey, Nestleton, Ont., writes:—"For several years I suffered from what the doctor called nerve exhaustion and I also had eczema on my face. I suffered from sudden starting from sleep, brain fag, nervous irritability and indigestion. Every little undertaking seemed to become such a momentous thing—even the preparing of the meals worried me to death and left me tired out. On the advice of a friend who uses it, I tried Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and must say that it is the most effective medicine I have ever used, and with the change in my health and the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment, the eczema cleared up."

Fluttering Heart

Mrs. J. A. Wright, Barwick, Ont., writes:—"Last Spring I felt very miserable, seemed tired all the time and didn't care if I never ate anything. I never was hungry, and it seemed as if what little food I did take, did not digest. I could not sleep and my heart was in a weak condition. It would flutter, stop for a second, and then beat so hard that I could hear it thump. I sent for several boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and by the time I had taken four boxes I felt quite well, and have been ever since. The Nerve Food strengthened my stomach, relieved my heart and built up my strength better than any other medicine ever did.

FAITH HEALING MISSION.

Bishop of Brantford Was Severely Criticized.

LONDON, Dec. 6. — (Canadian Press).— Bishop of Bradford, Rt. Rev. Arthur Perowne who recently sanctioned Faith Healing Mission, in Bradford, conducted by J. M. Hickson, a lay man well known in Canadian connection with faith healing and was severely criticized therefor it declares that criticisms have left him entirely unrepentent.

"There is a limit to the powers of a physician," Bishop Perowne says, "therefore can it be so very cruel to allow people to try another method.' '

Heck Hawkins' Week in Vaudeville

By CARRIE HODGSON, Peterboro.

In the mind of his wife, Heck Hawkins was undoubtedly the greatest ball-player in America, and the public, apparently, agreed with her; most assuredly they declared him a pitcher par excellence. His method of handling the ball affording matter for discussion in every hotel lobby, poolroom and sporting club throughout the country. Strangely enough, Heck rarely heard these discussions, for his bump of domesticity was so fully developed that, when he left the ball park, it was to go home—and home, to him, meant wherever his wife might be; while to Judith Hawkins there existed no such a place unless Heck was there. Until the arrival of Hector, Jr., she had attended every game in which her husband had taken part. The advent of that young gentleman, however, ended pleasures of that sort, and Judith ceased to be a "fan."

It was shortly after her exit from the field that enterprising theatrical managers, craving for something new to tickle the fickle palate of the pleasure-seeking masses, decided that the greatest sensational novelty at hand was the exploiting before the footlights of this handsome god of the bleachers. Great! was the verdict—but will he fall to it, they questioned. Why not? reason replied. Men are more susceptible to flattery than women—money talks—and reasoning thus the argument ended and Heck Hawkins was adroitly approached. He greeted the suggestion with good-natured laughter, glanced casually over the type-written sketch in which he was to figure as hero, then as nine out of every ten men, accustomed to humanity's applause would have done, he hestiated, and, in doing so, was lost. It was almost a case of naming his own terms—he was the man of the hour, and knew it—so the contract was signed. Then he thought of Judith.

"What a jolly surprise it will be to her; why, she can take the boy, and together they can watch me act. Great!" His reasoning was good; he was quite proud of himself. This was a new step up the ladder of fame. Fame, that most dangerous of sirens, and he put his foot on the first rung with an agility that surprised even himself. An hour after signing up he had lost some of his enthusiasm, and by the time he had reached the hotel and was about to face his wife, the rungs of gold had turned to brass and the ladder was tottering woefully, for he suddenly recollected he had not consulted her.

"She'll be jolly proud," he kept repeating to himself; "it will please her to see my name in great big letters: 'Heck Hawkins, America's Greatest Ball Pitcher, in Vaudeville',"—but, in his heart he was not so sure.

As he reached her room, and overheard the cooing of his babe and the crooning of its mother, he reverently lifted his hat and whispered, "God bless her," adding softly, "how I love her." Then he opened the door. With a smile of welcome she rose to greet him, and while still encircled by his arms, asked, as she had done so often before, "Anything new to-day, dear?"

"Anything new—well, I guess yes." It was just the opening he required.

"What is it—another of those dazzling, unexpected plays of yours?"

"That's it—unexpected play—you've hit the nail on the head."

"Did they howl, dear? Tell me all about it—only hurry, Heck." The young wife unfolded herself from her husband's embrace and looked tantalizingly into his face. What she saw there did not please. "What is wrong?" she added hastily and with sudden fear.

"Nothing wrong, little mother, only I forgot to consult the oracle in a big deal I made to-day. Judith, I am going into vaudeville."

"Into vaudeville!" Had a bomb exploded at her feet, the expression on her face could not have been blanker. "Into vaudeville—to play ball?"

"No, dear—to act." The ladder had now toppled entirely over.

"To act—you! Why, dear—oh, Heck—to act; it is ridiculous."

"Judith, it is immense. They have promised me a thousand a week. By jove it will buy you a new seal coat!" Hope was kindling anew.

"I don't want a sealskin—I want you."

"You've got me, little mother; I don't intend to go into this thing as a business. Besides, you and the boy can sit in a box every night and see me act.'

The baby gurgling at this opportune moment aroused both to more pleasant thought, and the tense expression on the wife's face softened as she continued: "I am wrong, dear, to discourage you; but somehow, it chilled me. I was a bit afraid you were not capable, and you must not do anything to ruin your reputation. Sit quietly down and tell it all to me straight."

He did, putting in no frills. Told her how the big theatrical magnates had approached him with the scheme to "star" him for one week—his colleagues the next, and so on each week, or until the theatre-going masses demanded something new. He told her of the sketch formulated in the mind of the enterprising manager—of the plot in which he, a noted ball-player, was to win the love of a beautiful athletic girl by teaching her the game, etc., just for one week. As he concluded his recital, dwelling at considerable length on the easy money to be made, he searched his wife's face for the encouragement he hoped might be forthcoming, but a woefully pitiful sigh was all he heard—a tear-dimmed eye all he saw.

"I'd cut it, dear, but I signed."

"Play it, Heck," she responded; "do your best. You never broke a contract yet, and I'll not ask you to now." Great boisterous, six-footer that he was, he was afraid of the little woman before him. She had never, in all their married life, uttered a word of protest to anything he ever said or did, and this new condition of affairs filled him with strange misgivings.

He did not know, either, that when he departed for his first rehearsal that she wept herself to sleep. Had he known this, all the contracts under the stars would not have bound him.

The following morning he faithfully studied his part, watching her face meanwhile for the least note of disapproval. He found none; instead, she listened to his recitals, gave him pointers her womanly intuition knew he required, smoothed the rough edges off the amateur, until at length he fully believed her objections and fears had vanished.

Conscience was pricking him a trifle, but things having gone so smoothly thus far he must not raise issue again; so Heck Hawkins, greatest ball-player in America, decided it was unnecessary to tell his wife that Claire Keith, his companion in the sketch, lived in a nearby flat, and, as a gentleman, he had found it necessary to escort her home after the first rehearsal. When the week in vaudeville commenced it would be Judith who would share the taxi—Judith, and the boy—for he felt confident she would not miss a performance—the little wife who, for years, had rarely missed a game of ball.

* * * *

The night of Heck Hawkins debut arrived. Proud and beautiful his wife occupied the most prominent box at the theatre—as much the cynosure of all eyes as her husband. When the number on the card at either side of the stage told the audience that the "star" of the evening was about to appear, the applause was deafening. But with the stage a blaze of light and the body of the theatre in darkness, no one saw the sudden blanching of the young wife's face as, hand in hand, Claire Keith and Heck came upon the stage. That her own, her very own husband should be so close, so attentive to the beautiful girl beside him was incomprehensible. She forgot it was merely a bit of play-acting. The sketch was short, pithy, clever; in fact, it was a hit. Heck Hawkins could remain before the footlights indefinitely had he chosen. As for Judith, she did not hear a word; she could only see and feel—feel her husband in the arms of another woman. How grateful she was when the curtain fell on the last number—how thankful when they were once again at home with the baby who had slept through it all.

"Did you enjoy it, dearest?" Heck was overwhelmed with his success. This was indeed a delightful departure from the dirt and dust of the ball grounds

"You were splendid, Heck!"

"And my partner—wasn't she great?"

"Oh—she is very beautiful," was the reply.

"Yes, she sure is; and, say, can't she sing?"

"Yes, she can sing; but I had eyes and ears only for you. I shall not go again, dear; I want to remember you in your first blaze of glory—on your first night in vaudeville."

"You won't go again?" He looked his surprise, but, manlike, misconstrued her meaning. "Well, dear, perhaps it would be better. You never cared for late hours, and there is baby, you know. Had he thrust a knife into her heart he could not have hurt her more. That he could play, and with another woman—could work without her applause, was, indeed, something new. With a smile he could not fathom she kissed him good night, leaving him alone with his papers, his cigar and his memories.

Dazzled by the sensation he had made, Heck Hawkins was blind to the tired expression on the little mother's face. Had he noticed it he would probably have tried to kiss it away, and attributed it to the important fact that baby was cutting more teeth; but he failed to notice it. Instead, his afternoons and nights were spent at the theatre, his mornings in bed—and for the first time in her wedded life, the young wife was practically alone. The name of Claire, so often mentioned by him in the few hours he gave to his wife, maddened her, though never for an instant did she question his honor or fidelity. She could not help the thought that intruded itself a hundred times a day—that, perhaps, he had more than a passing professional interest in the heroine of the sketch, but she emphatically banished it as it rose. It was only necessary to recall the happy days of the past to convince her that no woman could ever usurp her place.s Something was amiss, however, for his act was early on the bill and he never reached home before midnight. Five days of the wretched engagement had passed when she determined she would go once again and see him act. She would take baby—would show the world how proud she was to see her husband the idol of the day. With great care she donned his favorite gown, and ere the rise of the curtain on the first number she entered the theatre. Not wishing to occupy a box because of the child, she secured one of the very back seats in the house. This, in itself, was a novelty, and she felt she was enjoying herself. She could watch, unseen, the vast crowd before her applaud the man who was all her own—her very own. At last he appeared; her bosom swelled with pride as the audience uproarously greeted their favorite, and she clasped the sleeping babe so close that she could easily have smothered it.

"Great, old Hawkins, ain't he?" The usher who spoke had just placed a huge basket of flowers at the foot of his idol.

"Peach, if ever there was one; but, gee he's an easy mark!"

"Easy nothin', if you mean Claire. Takin' her home in a taxi every night ain't nothin'." Judith's heart almost ceased to beat; her lips and hands grew cold as she strained every nerve to listen. What a blessing the auditorium was dark.

"'Tis something," was the quick retort, in a now too audible stage whisper. "Who ever heard of Heck Hawkins doin' a mean act—that's why he should be put next, though more than like there's nothin' in it—she lives up his way, you know." Judith blessed the boy for his defence of her husband—but her life seemed suddenly to have become a blank. In her sudden desire to leave the theatre she struggled to arise, but trembled so violently that she could not stand. Calm herself she must, so with a supreme effort Judith directed her attention to the stage and drank in every word of the sketch.

"She lives up his way, you know," kept running through her brain.

"That's all; oh, I know that is all—she lives up his way, you know!" How earnestly she watched her husband's face, but not a sign could she trace of aught save a desire to play his part well.

"She lives up his way, you know!" How those words had been her salvation. God bless that usher. At last the curtain fell, and, clasping her boy to her breast, Judith arose and advanced to the rotunda. She was determined to wait for her husband, and she did not have long to wait. She heard his full, rich voice call a taxi, then she saw, or rather felt, him draw near. Their eyes met—his lit in glad surprise, then fell as hers left his to rest on Claire Keith.

"Usher—a taxi for Miss Keith," was all he said. It took but a moment, yet, in that short passing of time, both women knew and understood.

"My darling," he whispered, as with an almost solemn air he took the baby from Judith's arms: "let me hold our boy."

"Shall I call a taxi for you, sir?" It was the usher whom Judith could have worshipped who spoke.

"Yes, boy, please."

"Where are you going, Heck?" Judith hardly recognized her own voice.

"To Heaven, darling—home."

"Jolly good chap that; I guess she lives up his way, too!"

"Say, kid, cut it out—that's his wife."

"Oh—Gee!"

MENU FOR A FAMILY

Breakfast—Baked apples, rolled oats, thin cream, creamed dried beef on toast, potato and spinach timbales, corn muffins, orange marmalade, milk, coffee.

Luncheon — Cauliflower au gratin, broiled lamb chops, brown bread and butter sandwiches, grapes, milk, tea.

Dinner—Noodle soup, roast loin of pork, candied sweet potatoes, creamed carrots, stuffed tomato salad, whole wheat bread and butter, sliced peaches, plain sponge cake, milk, coffee.

A child under six years of age should not be given the dried beef for breakfast. He may have a bit of the jelly part of the marmalade on his toast, but none of the rind.

Two or three flowerettes of cauliflower should be put aside for a four-year-old child before the vegetable is prepared "au gratin." It's so easy to broil a lamb chop for his luncheon that it's really the only thing to do when the dinner meat is planned to please the man of the house. Meat once a day is the rule for a child under six, and noontime is the ideal meal for it.

Potatoes and Spinach Timbales.

Two cups hot riced potatoes, 2 tablespoons butter, 2 eggs, 1-2 cup finely chopped spinach, 1-2 teaspoon salt, 4 tablespoons hot milk.

Add milk, butter and salt to potatoes, and beat well. Beat in yolks of eggs with spinach. Add whites of eggs beaten until stiff and dry. Half fill buttered timbales or custard cups with mixture and bake 20 minutes in a moderate oven.

Cauliflower au Gratin.

One medium sized head cauliflower 1 1-2 cups milk, 1 tablespoon flour, 2 tablespoons butter, 2 tablespoons grated cheese, 1-2 teaspoon salt, 1-3 cup dried bread crumbs, 2 tablespoons melted butter.

Remove outer leaves and stalks from cauliflower. Place in cold water, head down, for half an hour. Drain and put in saucepan, head up. Cover with boiling water, add 1 teaspoon salt and boil gently until tender, about 40 minutes. Drain and separate into flowerettes. Put in a buttered baking dish and cover with the sauce, made as follows: Melt butter, stir in flour, slowly add milk, stirring constantly. When thick and smooth add salt and cheese and stir until cheese is melted. Pour over cauliflower and cover with crumbs well covered with melted butter. Bake in a moderate oven until nicely browned and serve at once.

Candied Sweet Potatoes.

Three or four sweet potatoes, 2 tablespoons butter, 3 tablespoons sugar, salt.

Pare potatoes and cut in halves lengthwise if they are "fat." Cook in boiling water until tender, but not broken. Add salt when potatoes are about half cooked. Melt butter in a shallow pan with a cover. Add potatoes and sprinkle with sugar. Cover and bake in a hot oven 20 minutes. Turn pieces of potatoes at the end of 10 minutes to be sure their whole surface is well coated with the butter and sugar mixture.

Breakfast—Grape juice, hominy cooked with figs, thin cream, toasted bran bread, scrambled eggs, milk, coffee.

Luncheon—Lima beans in lemon sauce, peanut butter sandwiches, apple tapioca pudding, milk, tea.

Dinner — Salisbury steak, brown gravy, mashed potatoes, buttered beets, tomato and endive salad, oatmeal bread and butter, pear and pineapple conserve, Mother's pumpkin pie, milk, coffee.

The pumpkin pie is a concession to father but junior may have a small piece without the crust.

Home-made grape juice makes an excellent breakfast "fruit" and the housekeeper who has a grape vine over her back fence may be glad of a simple rule for making this "home brew."

Grape Juice.

Pick over grapes and remove from stems. Wash thoroughly. Put in preserving kettle and heat, stirring to prevent burning. No water is needed in the kettle as some clings to the grapes. When broken pour into jelly bag and let drip. Measure and add 1 cup of sugar to every 4 cups juice. Return to preserving kettle, bring to the boiling point and pour into hot sterilized bottles or cans. Seal. Be sure the juice is boiling when put into the bottles and that the bottles are full to overflowing.

Lima Beans in Lemon Sauce.

One pint lima beans, 1 egg, 2 tablespoons cold water, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 2 tablespoons butter, salt and pepper.

Cook beans in boiling water to cover until tender. Use as little water as possible. Drain if necessary but the water should be cooked away. Season with salt and pepper and keep hot. Beat egg with water until light. Beat in lemon juice and butter and cook over hot water until thick. Season with salt and pepper and pour over beans.

Pear and Pineapple Conserve.

Pare and core pears and weigh.

One pound pears, 1-2 lemon, grated rind and juice, 1 orange, grated rind and juice, 1-2 pineapple, 3-4 as much sugar as fruit.

Cut pears into cubes. Cook until tender. Cut pineapple into cubes and cook until tender. Use just enough water to prevent burning for both the pears and pineapple. Combine fruit, add grated rind and juice of lemon and orange and measure. Use 3-4 as much sugar as fruit. Put fruit into preserving kettle, bring to the boiling point and slowly sift in sugar which has been heated in the oven. Cook until mixture is transparent. Pour into sterilized glasses and cover with paraffin when cold.

CONSERVE FERTILITY.

Conserve fertility through the different demands of root systems of different crops is one of the advantages of crop rotation. This intermittent use of fertility permits recuperation of the soil after the crops that make heavy demands.

How To Build a Hog Feeder

It Saves Time, Labor and Money and Is Intended For Developing Pigs For Market.

Hogs may best be prepared for marketing by the self-feeder route. Self-feeders save feed, time and labor and generally reduce the cost of hog production. They may be built in compartments, with part of the pig's ration in each. If there is sufficient supply of each component of his diet and no part of the feeder becomes clogged, the pig will be found generally to balance his own ration.

This article describes in detail the construction of two types of self-feeders, and explains their usage. One type is intended for a stock up to 15 pigs, the other is larger and is planned to accommodate 40 pigs.

These self-feeders will be found to be durable, weather-tight, roomy, easy to construct, easily regulated for different kinds of feeds and so built that it will feed into the trough with the least clogging of feed.

For 15 Pigs.

The smaller type is a one-way feeder. It is adopted especially for small lots and indoor feeding, although it could just as well be placed out on the pasture as the larger type.

It is a good plan to put two partitions in the trough to keep the pigs from getting into it lengthwise. The rod, XY, shown on the front elevation of the plan, has a winged nut at one end for exerting pressure on the adjustable slide, so as to hold the slide at any height and to regulate the opening underneath.

The larger self-feeder has a hinged flap at the bottom of the adjustable slide, on either side, to enable the pig to jar down any clogged feed. This hinged flap should be sawed through vertically at its middle, so as to make two out of it and not make one almost unwieldy flap 4 feet long.

Watch Feeding.

To keep the feed from clogging up the crack between the slide and the hinged flap, a strip of tin should be placed there to cover up the crack. This is shown in detail in the sketch of slide and hinged flap.

The self-feeder, of course, needs watching, so that it does not become clogged. If one portion of a pig's diet is unobtainable, there is liability of the animal's stuffing itself with too much tankage or protein, or too much starch. Its diet becomes unbalanced and the results are poor.

These self-feeders require feed mixtures to be prepared beforehand. This is good practice, especially when such unpalatable feeds as oats and wheat middlings are cheap and plentiful.

For young pigs that require much protein during their rapid growth, especially while not on pasture, the following rations are suggested:

Feed Proportions.

Sucklings, 5 to 40 pounds, fed in creep—ground corn, 80 per cent; tankage, 20 per cent. Or, ground corn, 30; ground barley, 30; sieved ground oats, 25; tankage, 15.

Weanlings, 30 to 75 pounds—ground corn, 85; tankage, 15. Or, ground barley, 89; tankage, 11. Or, ground barley, 40; ground oats, 30; middlings, 24; tankage, 6.

Shoats, 75 to 150 pounds—ground corn, 90; tankage, 10. Or, ground barley, 94; tankage, 6. Or, ground barley, 55; ground oats, 25; middlings, 17; tankage, 3.

Hogs, 150 to 250 pounds—ground corn, 94; tankage, 6. Or, ground barley, 97; tankage, 3. Or, ground barley, 70; ground oats, 20; middlings, 9; tankage, 1.

Aids In Digestion.

Water and salt should be available to self-fed pigs constantly. Lime should also be before them, in the form of ground limestone, ground rock phosphate, air-slaked lime or bone meal.

It is good practice to put the self-feeder out on the pasture, to help the hogs in grazing.

Further suggestions in the self-feeding of pigs, according to the University of Wisconsin, are:

Place the self-feeder on a plank or concrete platform if possible, not in the mud.

Paint a self-feeder to be used outside. It prolongs its life.

An opening below the adjustable slide which can be regulated from about one to three inches is adapted to most feeds.

Ward Off Chickens.

Chickens may be kept out of the trough of a self-feeder by means of flaps hung from above and over the front of the trough. A pig soon learns how to reach the feed back of the flap. He may push the flap inward or lift it with his nose. Board an inch or less in thickness is commonly used.

Ear corn can be self-fed, but it requires an especially constructed self-feeder.

Raise Sheep, Don't Spend Time Looking for "Goats"

Saskatchewan's corn crop the past year included 66,000 acres, an increase from 16,000 in four years. The second annual Saskatchewan Provincial Corn Show at Swift Current brought out over three hundred entries of corn with exhibits of very high quality. This despite the fact that the growing season was most unfavorable. Some very interesting advice was handed to the farmers during the show. Hon. C. M. Hamilton, Provincial Minister of Agriculture, in criticizing "calamity howlers," said there were farmers waiting for Providence to rescue them from present conditions. Some suggested that two crops like 1915 would suffice. He saw a big change resulting from improved production methods and marketing, adding:

"There is needed, however, economy on the part of all, not by the farmer alone, but by all employed in industries, until there is a closer parity between the price of the goods the farmer has to buy and the price he receives for what he has to sell. Implement manufacturers are already adopting methods of more economical production which will result in cheaper farm implements. The situation is not to be solved by howling hard times, but by every industry of the country adopting the policy of reducing the cost of their products as farmers had been compelled to do."

That the Government and manufacturers are not to blame for conditions under farmers' control, as many farmers cry out, was the statement of N. B. Williams, President of Saskatchewan Agricultural Societies, advising the farmers to raise more sheep and spend less time looking for goats on which to lay the blame for hard times.

SMART FUR.

A smart fur for this season is clipped leopard cat. It has the virtue of being comparatively inexpensive as well as stylish.

LEFT-OVER DISH.

You can make a good left-over dish by combining a cupful of minced meat with about the same amount of cold boiled rice and three well beaten eggs. Cook like an omelet or bake it in the oven.

One Year Lag Between Farm and Industry Peaks

That the recent appreciation in the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar has placed the farmer in a position roughly comparable with that of the manufacturer, and that only when such a relationship exists can there be general prosperity, was the contention of Prof. Gilbert Jackson discussing the business cycle before the Alumni Federation. That general interest in this subject is growing apace was shown by the large audience which gathered to hear Prof. Jackson's discussion.

One of the most interesting features dealt with was the relationship which exists between various phases of the cycle, such as between the industrial and agricultural movements, and between industrial and agricultural purchasing power. It was pointed out that there is a lag of about a year between the peaks of these two factors.

In analyzing the cycle, Prof. Jackson indicated that there are really three cycles working within one another. There is the four-year cycle—two years up and two down; there is the ten or eleven year swing, and lastly, the half-century movement. A complete study of business movements involves these three.

A LITTLE FIR TREE'S CHRISTMAS

Note: This little Christmas Pageant is intended to be sufficiently flexible so that the teacher may use the number of children she has available. The choruses can be enlarged or diminished according to her needs.

Scene 1.

(If it is possible to have painted scenery use a woods background covered with snow for this scene. If not use sheets, and hang fir branches down over them, sheets on the floor.) The curtain rises showing a child dressed as a fir tree standing alone right in the center of the stage, rather dejected.

Fir Tree: Oh, I'm so lonesome,—here it is almost night and Christmas Eve at that, and no one has come for me, so that I could be their Christmas tree.

(Snow fairies enter softly.)

One says: Little tree we will sing to you, then you won't be lonesome. Besides the Queen Fairy told us some people are on their way to get you and you are to be a surprise for some little folks. See, we will decorate you with snow flakes.

(They dance around tree and toss cotton flakes on it. Then sing softly, "Holy Night, Silent Night." As they run away quietly a little girl with a bright scarf around her neck dressed for cold weather comes running in.)

Girl: Here it is, Dad, here it is, the very one I picked out. Do you think it will like to be the tree for little Joe and Lucy? They'll just love it, I know. Would you like to be the first Christmas tree for some little folks, Mr. Fir Tree? (Tree nods stiffly.) Oh look! Dad, I do believe it's nodding at me!

(Dad is bundled up for cold weather, takes ax from shoulder and pretends to cut down tree, laying it on sled the daughter brings in.)

Dad: There we are, dear. It's a very pretty tree and now we must hurry if we are to get all ready for Mrs. Stone's little folks tonight.

Girl: Let me help, too.

INTERLUDE.

Chorus of boys marches in front of black curtain, each with a red sash over his white blouse from shoulder to hip. Each keeps time with sleigh bells and sings, "Merry, Merry, Merry Christmas Bells." Any other Christmas carol can be substituted here.

Scene 2.

Curtain goes up, showing chair, and table with ragged white cover on it in front of black curtain. Two small packages on table. Back of curtain and not visible to the audience is the Fir Tree decorated with tinsel and candles and presents. Door at one side. (Mrs. Stone, a widow in black dress with a small shawl about her shoulders. She drags in, drops into chair, leaning elbows on the table.)

Mrs. Stone: Oh dear, oh dear, another Christmas and just about like last year. Only two little presents for the poor darlings. A ball for Joe and mop stick doll for Lucy. I wish I could,—oh what is the use of wishing? When you've done all you can, and there is so little, oh dear, (drops head wearily in arms). (Her two children come running in in night clothes.)

Children: Merry Christmas, mama. Merry Christmas. Kiss us both, such a nice motherkins! (Children hug her and fuss over her.)

Mrs. Stone: Bless your hearts, mother's precious lambs. Here is a ball for Joe and a Dolly for Lucy.

(Children take gifts, but Lucy, stops and stares at the curtain. Runs to mother.)

Lucy: Why Mummie, where did that come from, why——

(Mother rises and stares, children clutch her skirts as the curtain parts and shows Christmas tree.)

(Joe looks up and says softly):

Joe: I think the fairies must have brought it. Lucy, look! there they are now! (Snow fairies steal in quietly and group around tree humming "Joy to the World" softly. When all are in place they break forth joyously "Joy to the World, the Lord is Come." Then slip away again as children sigh with pleasure.)

Mrs. Stone: Well, it is a real tree, that's sure, and I am just wondering if some real repole didn't help just a little. (Knock is heard, Mother opens door. The Girl of the first scene rushes in shouting "Merry Christmas!" Her parents follow. Mother shakes hands with them and wipes away tears with shawl. The girl hugs both children and they all turn to look at the tree.)

Lucy: It looks as if it liked to be our Christmas Tree.

Joe: 'Do you, Mr. Fir Tree? (Tree nods stiffly.)

Turkeys Raised For Stock

FAIRMOUNT, Ind., Dec. 6.—Back in 1884, Mrs. J. L. Armstrong bought a setting of turkey eggs.

Since then she has made thousands of Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners complete with the turkeys she has raised.

Until five years ago she provide large corporations with turkeys to supply their employes each Thanksgiving and Christmas. Now she has such a reputation as a grower of turkeys that people demand her stock for breeding purposes.

Mrs. Armstrong's trade extends all over the United States. Four recent orders received by her for eggs came from New Mexico, California, Washington and New Jersey.

Eggs Are High!

She sells eggs from 80 cents to $1.50 each.

Birds sold for stock bring $1 a pound. Some of the male birds in Mrs. Armstrong's flock will easily bring $50 at this rate.

"Turkeys are the most profitable birds one can keep on the farm. A turkey hen can be fed on half of what it takes to feed a chicken hen.

Cheap Upkeep.

"You can't raise turkeys in a house. They must be out-of-doors. They roost in the trees or on fences in the open fields. Sometimes during extreme cold weather, we drive them in some other shelter on the farm.

"We keep them in open pens during the laying season and drive a few boards in the corners of the pens to make a hiding place for the nest.

"The coop which we keep the mother hen in is made of strips just close enough to keep the turkey hen from escaping. Sometimes during a severe rainy spell we spread a canvas over the coop.

"When I started, I sold turkeys for 6 cents a pound. I thought 15 cents a pound was a big price in those days. Now I am offered 50 and 60 cents a pound for turkeys to be killed and I get $1 a pound when I sell stock birds."

THRESHING TIME IS END OF WORK

All Farm Labor Leads Up to Pouring of Golden Grain Into World.

BY HELEN MOHER.

I consider the threshing time as being the most important and interesting time of the farm season. After all the care and attention paid during the forepart of the year to the planting of grain, root crops and other vegetables, there comes a time when you expect at least a reasonable success. Scarcely any person who spend the largest part of his time in the city realizes the hard labor which farmers in general spend on their lands from early spring till late fall, coupled with the long hours, which everyone knows must be spent, if any degree of success is to be had.

When we look at a loaf of bread, so few of us stop to think the work that has to be done from the time of sowing the grain until the threshing in harvest time, and then the milling of that same grain into flour before we can get a loaf of bread.

All of which brings us to the time of threshing, which, to my mind, seems to be really the most interesting time of all, as all other phases of farm life seem to centre around that particular time.

In years long past the business of threshing was always one of great preparations for weeks before the travelling mill would arrive. The power being derived from a revolving table with a circular gear running around the entire length of the table which connected with a long shaft which extended from the "horse power", as this circular table was called, to the mill which stood just inside the barn door between the large mows on either side containing the sheaves of grain.

About four teams of horses were required to operate this revolving table by being driven round and round by a generally loud-voiced man who sat on a box in the centre and wielded a long whip, and who kept up a constant shouting at the horses as they toiled steadily in a never-ending circle.

But to-day all is changed. The horse power is gone, and in its place we have the steam-driven mill with its huge blower for carrying the straw out to the stack on the other side of the barn. Where once it took days to thresh it is now a matter of a few hours, so mechanically perfect have these machines become.

HAVE YOU EVER TRIED CHEVON?

Just as you call cattle meat "beef," calf meat "veal" and sheep meat "mutton," you should hereafter refer to goat meat as "chevon."

"Chevon" is the official name for this meat approved by goat producers. The word comes from the French "chevre" meaning goat, and "mouton," meaning mutton.

In other words, "chevon" is goat mutton.

SPARROW SEEN AS DISEASE SPREADER

Carries Parasites That Give Infection to Other Birds and to Poultry.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Dec. 3.—The common English sparrow is in worse regard than it ever has been. Now it is found that this little scavenger harbors a parasite at times and spreads infection to other birds, chickens and turkeys included.

Drs. W. A. Riley and H. C. H. Kernkamp of the University of Minnesota come to this conclusion after having examined infected birds, chickens and turkeys.

The parasite, they found, lives in tumors or cysts on the skin. It has been known in Europe as occurring in song birds, but was never discovered on poultry.

Several investigators have found the parasite on English sparrows, and it is to these that they attribute the spread of the disease.

Average annual yield of milk, per cow, is only 4000 pounds.

BARN RAISING IS THE GREAT EVENT

Fifty Men Assist and Work Goes On Apace In Rain.

BY EDITH PATTERSON.

My subject to-day is on "barn raising time," which happened at our farm this summer on the twenty-fifth day of June.

It was a very busy time, of course. There were fifty men and thirty-five women and children.

It was wet in the morning but fair in the afternoon, when most of the raising was done. The men had their dinner in the house on account of the rain, but had their supper on the lawn, which was very enjoyable.

I remember that on this particular day my brother and I came home from school at noon for this event, while my two sisters were at home all day.

We had a Peterboro' carpenter and his son, of Keene, who were two weeks fixing the timbers, boring holes and making small wooden pegs, etc.

When raising day arrived the men carried the foundation timbers and placed them on wall. Then lumbering was laid over these for the men to work on. Then they carried the frame timbers and fitted them together and they were raised by men pulling on ropes on one side and some lifting on pike-poles on the other side. The carpenter all the while yelled his orders and shouted: "Yo-heave," "all together boys," and in a remarkably short time piece by piece was raised and the frame was up.

They next put up the plates, then scaffolding was placed on these for men to work on putting up the purline plates and rafters. This completed the whole frame of the 36 ft. by 60 ft. barn.

After this they all rushed for the table, where they appeared to enjoy their supper.

STRONG STUFF.

A doctor friends tells us he recently received a letter reading like this: "Dear Doctor—Your medicine did me a world of good. Before I started taking the medicine I didn't have strength enough to spank the baby, but now I can whip my husband. God bless you."

FARM AND CITY PEOPLE DEPEND ONE ON OTHER SAYS PROFESSOR

Two Classes of Producers Exchanging Their Products in New Light.

LAYS A BOGEY.

Fewer Farmers Because of Modern Machinery—Farm Is Not a Unit.

The inter-dependence of country producer and consumer, and town producer and consumer, of rural industry and urban industry, in which the interests of the farmers and other classes in Canada are inseparably bound up one in the other in such a way that all must be prosperous—or otherwise—was brought out in a new light by J. B. Reynolds, M.A., president of the Ontario Agricultural College, in his address at the annual dinner of the Canadian National Newspapers and Periodicals Association. Professor Reynolds discussed the relations of farm and other industries as a condition rather than a theory. From an independent unit supplying its own needs the farm, under modern conditions, had become a producing plant dependent for equipment and supplies on the town and city. In the farming class of to-day was constituted the biggest customer of the manufacturer and of the transportation companies and, therefore, the most important factor in the functions of financial and business institutions. Whether this situation was ideal was not the question; it was the existing facts with which we had to deal. Agitations based on the depopulation of the farms and the long hours of farm workers, compared with city labor, failed to arouse any feeling of alarm on the part of this outstanding agricultural expert—they were merely indications of the evolution of farm and other industries.

Professor Reynolds presented a picture of what agriculture used to be in Canada, and another of what it is to-day. He told of his own boyhood; how the farm provided wholesome food, warm clothing, a substantial shelter for the family, with congenial though limited surroundings; about the only thing that it was necessary to go to town for was to get the wool from the sheep carded before it was spun into yarn and made into clothing. He contrasted these conditions with the present; on a farm in Manitoba, in a district which could produce the best of stock, he had been served with corned beef which had been tinned in New Zealand, and at the Ontario Agricultural College he had found that the milk supply for farmers' sons in a splendid dairying district was being manufactured from a canned product.

He thus illustrated how in a comparatively few years the farm had lost its status as an independent economic unit, and had been industrialized. To-day the farmer had a fuller life, although there might be some question as to whether it were really a better one

WAR TERROR IS FARMERS' HELP

Poison Gas Used To Check Chinch Bug Invasion of Kansas.

THOUSANDS KILLED.

MANHATTAN, Kas., Dec. 6.—Poison gas, the kind that killed and maimed soldiers during the war, is proving a boon to farmers.

It is ridding their grain fields of the chinch bug.

Experiments conducted last season by the Kansas State Agricultural college finds this the most effective method for killing off this pest.

Last summer especially, the chinch bug was more numerous in Kansas than ever before. Yet poison gas stopped the insect's march of destruction. With barriers of creosote on the ground, it is reported, practically complete control was possible.

Cover Ground.

After hatching out in wheat and oats, and greatly diminishing the yield among these crops, the bugs were left high and dry at harvest time. Then the exodus began to other fields.

Experimenters report the ground literally covered with these pests seeking new sources of food supply. Tar and creosote lines were laid down and at intervals of about 16 feet, calcium cyanide flakes were set down. These flakes, when coming into contact with the moisture of the ground or air, form the deadly hydro-cyanic gas, or poison gas as it was called during the war.

That killed the bugs as effectively as it had endangered the soldiers.

No Passage.

Stopped by the odor of the tar or creosote, they would crawl along this barrier until they got to the layer of poison gas. That would be their end.

So that the wind should not blow the gas away, post holes were made at rod intervals and the flakes dropped into them. The bugs crawled into these by the thousands, after having been turned aside by the barriers.

A check-up of the invasion in Kansas showed that 666 of these insects passed over a two-inch line every second!

On a 600-foot strip between a wheat field and a corn field, 15,000,000 bugs tried to pass within a period of four days.

Despite these conditions the creosote barriers and poison gas checked the hich bug at every turn.

WORLD WHEAT LOWER.

Shortage of 401,000,000 Bushels in World's Supply This Year.

According to the most recent report of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, there will be a shortage of 401,000,000 bushels of wheat in the world's supply in comparison with that of last year. The statement refers to the fact that the official estimate of the production of wheat in Argentina is 190,332,000 bushels in comparison with 247,038,000 last year, which is a decrease of 23 per cent. Along with this is the significant statement that the carry-over surpluses of August next will amount to only 98,000,000 bushels from all countries. This is an exceptionally small surplus, being lower than for any recent year except in the war period, when export was restricted.

The total wheat production of the continent of Europe for the current year is expected to be in the neighborhood of 1,112,889,000 bushels as atainst 1,263,005,000 bushels last year. These statements provide further evidence of the favorable position of Canadian wheat with regard to prices.

UNFORTUNATELY

Mrs. Blank could only find two aisle seats—one behind the other. Wishing to have her sister beside her, she turned and cautiously surveyed the man in the next seat. Finally she leaned over and timidly addressed him:

"I beg your pardon, sir, but are you alone?"

The man, without turning his head in the slightest, but twisting his mouth to an alarming degree, and shielding it with his hand, muttered:

"Cut it out, kid—cut it out. My wife's with me."

THE LAST STRAW

One day a Scottish boy and an English boy who has been fighting were separated by their respective mothers, the Scottish boy, although the smaller of the two, being by far the more pugnacious.

"Whit garred ye fecht a big laddie like that?" asked his mother, as she wiped the blood from his nose.

"And I'll fecht him again," exclaimed the lad, "if he says Scotsmen hiv tae wear kilts because their feet are too big tae get into their trousers!"

THE EASIEST WAY.

"What are you going to be when you grow up, Jennie?"

"I'm going to be an old maid."

"An old maid, dear! Why?"

"'Cause I don't think I'd like to kiss a man a hundred times and tell him he's handsome every time I go shopping. I'd rather earn money and buy things for myself."

Canada Sways Price Of Wheat Says U. S.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 29.—Canada, and the weather up there, will bear watching in the future if American wheat growers want to get some idea of the prospects for a good price on wheat.

This is the message sent out by the rural economics department at Ohio State University here. Ralph F. Taber, extension specialist, explains it this wa

"We have a w..eat crop this year 30 million bushels larger than last year, and still the price is about 30 per cent higher. The reason, or at least part of it, lies in Canada.

"The three prairie provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba now have more to say about the world's wheat price than any other section of the world. It is to their misfortune as to weather that we can lay out good fortune and a favorable price for wheat.

"In 1923, Canada produced 474,199,000 bushels of wheat; this year her estimated production is 282,042,000. Her normal needs for home consumption and seed run from 80 to 100 millions.

"So there is a difference of about 200 bushels entering the world market. This difference is a larger amount than any other country exports.

"From now on, when considering prospects for a fair price, the American producer had best watch the weather in Canada. So long as we export nearly 100 million bushels, Canada, with her arable land suited to wheat, only one-fourth utilized, will, tariff or no tariff, have a direct bearing on the American wheat price."

ACRE PLOTS TO TEST SUGAR BEETS.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 3.—To test the possibilities of Winnipeg area in growing sugar beets experimental plots will be tried and as many farmers as possible will be asked to devote one acre to tests. These tests are preliminary to the establishment of a sugar beet factory here.

Feeding cabbage or potatoes just before milking results in a disagreeable odor in the milk, the Department of Agriculture finds. The best time to feed these vegetables to the cattle is immediately after milking, which produces no noticeable effect.

BUD MOTH RAVAGES.

The bud moth, presumably a European insect, was first noted in the United States about 1841. It has become an important apple pest, now present over much of the northern part of United States and southern Canada. The species is rather a general feeder, attacking most of the fruit trees and some shade and forest trees.

ANNUAL BAZAAR OMEMEE CHURCH

Women's Missionary Society of Methodist Church Met on Wednesday.

OMEMEE, Dec. 6—The annual bazaar given by the Women's Guild of Christ Church, was held on Tuesday evening. The weather was all that could be desired and the ladies turned out in great number to view, admire and purchase the wonderful display of fancy work and useful home made articles. The booths were very prettily decorated and the ladies in charge were attention personified. The articles throughout the various booths were reasonably priced, which resulted in quick selling.

On entering the Sunday School room, visitors were made heartily welcome by Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Weir and Miss R. Stephenson. The sale of fancy work was in charge of Miss A. Stephenson assisted by Miss Lila Fee and Mrs. E. Jamieson.

The country store was a great attraction for young and old, with its variety of gods, among which were noticed bright little baskets of home made candy, home-made bread, buns, pies, cakes, vegetables and potted plants. This booth was in charge of Miss Irene Clemett, assisted by the Misses Meta Thorne, Ethel Stephenson and Lenore Jamieson.

No bazaar would be complete without a fish pond and this particular baazar, being complete in every detail furnished much pleasure for the kiddies in the wonderful fish they landed. The fish pond was in charge of the Misses Mabel Rowand and Edna Morton.

After visiting the several booths, the tea room was visited, this feature being in charge of the President, Mrs. George Fee, assisted by Miss Hilda Clarke, Miss C. Cornwall, Mrs. J. Bannon and Miss S. Beatty. Here, a tempting menu was served for twenty-five cents and a social half hour spent by all.

The proceeds of the bazaar amounted to $157.00.

Annual Meeting.

The Womens Missionary Society of the Methodist Church met in their monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. Richard Poast, on Wednesday afternoon, the date having been changed owing to the District Missionary Convention being held on Thursday, the regular day.

The president, Mrs. Rowland, presided in her usual efficient manner. Reports were heard from various committees regarding preparation for the bazaar, all showing that the workers are most enthusiastic.

A synopsis of the fourth and fifth chapters of the study book was given by Mrs. Widdess and Miss Eva Race, both of which proved a most interesting study of the customs of the Chinese people.

The president announced the receipt of a Christmas letter from Mrs. George Hart of Gelert, enclosing twenty-five dollars in memory of her two aunts, the late Misses Katherine and Margaret English, to be used for a life membership in the Omemee W.M.S. This announcement was received with pleasure by the members of the society.

The secretary, Mrs. Widdess read out several notes of thanks for flowers sent to the sick.

A report of the birthday box, which was started a year ago for a flower fund was given by Miss Lila Parsons; the names of those remembered during the year were read out and the names of donaters since April 1924 given. The scheme has proved a success and many a sick room was brightened from this source during the year.

Christmas responsive reading led by the president and intermingled with bright Christmas hymns added pleasure to the meeting. Prayer for our missionairies at home and abroad, was offered by Mrs. Wm. Kennedy.

Mrs. E. Bradburn read the devotional leaflet on prayer, after which the Watch Tower was read by different members.

The singing of another Christmas hymn followed with prayer by Mrs. Rowland brought to a close a most interesting meeting. Dainty refreshments were then served by the hostesses, Mrs. Poast, Mrs. J. Shields and Mrs. P. Parsons and a social hour was enjoyed by all. Between twenty-five and thirty ladies, including visitors were present.

Presbyterians Met.

On Wednesday afternoon the regular monthly meeting of the Womens Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church was held in the Sunday School room.

The president, Mrs. J. A. Black, conducted the meeting. The Scripture lesson was read responsively from the twelfth chapter of Romans, followed by a brief prayer by Mrs. Black and Mrs. O. G. Williamson. The roll call was answered by the members with a passage from the Bible containing the word "guide" and the hymns chosen were relative to the subject.

The secretary, Mrs. E. H. Mitchell gave an interesting and thorough report of the attendance throughout the year, which showed a falling off of the attendance at the meetings but not of the membership. Much discussion followed concerning same and it is hoped that a greater interest will be created for the coming year.

Correspondence was read by the secretary regarding the Union of the missionary societies in the Methodist and Presbyterian Church, also a letter received by the financial treasurer, Mrs. S. J. Mackey, regarding the allocation desired from the Omemee Society. A further letter on "tithing" to help make up the deficit at headquarters, received much discussion and it was decided to choose this subject for the January meeting.

Owing to the late hour the study book was dispensed with and the election of officers resulted as follows:

President—Mrs. (Rev.) Black.
1st Vice-Pres.—Mrs. O. G. Williamson.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. L. Windrim.

Local Hotel Men Behind a Movement to Raise Money For Orphan Children.

Hotel Men's Golden Rule Day, in aid of the thousands of orphan children in the far east will be held in the hotels of this city on Sunday, December 7th. Thousands of these children are starving to death and their only hope for life is by the assistance given them by the Near East Relief workers who are putting on this Golden Rule Day throughout Canada and the United States.

On Sunday next, in each of the local hotels a blank cheque will be left beside each plate, for the visitors to fill out for any amount they wish. Illustrated folders will also explain the purpose of the work.

Meals over there cost only $5 for 100 and $60 will support one child for a year. The meals given them are very simple, but to them they are a treat and a banquet for many days they go hungry.

SOCIAL EVENING.

Mr. and Mrs. Melville Scott Presented With Silver Flower Basket and Caving Set.

A very pleasant evening was spent on Friday, November 28, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Edmison when about sixty of the members of Gilmour Memorial church and community enjoyed a social evening and also presented Mr. and Mrs. Melville Scott, who have been recently married, with an address and a beautiful silver flower basket and a carving set.

The following address was read by Mr. A. I. Edmison and the Misses Leila Sanderson and Beatrice McGregor made the presentation after which Mr. Scott replied in his usual pleasing manner. The evening was spent in games and music.

We, the members of the Gilmour Memorial Baptist Church and community, have great pleasure in asking you Mr. and Mrs. Melville Scott to accept this little present as a small token of our regard and esteem for you both on this, the happy ocasion of your marriage.

We prize very highly your friendship and society also your fellowship and service in the church and community.

You, Melville, we already know having lived in our midst all your life and we have come to regard you as the type of young man Canada needs to promote the best interests of our rural communities, steady, sober, industrious and neighborly, as you have always been, we know that the highest good of the church and the community will ever be your aim. Mrs. Scott comes into our midst a stranger and yet not a stranger, having some amongst us who have known her intimately for many years.

She represents a noble profession and we are sure that she will bring into her new life the same assiduous care and attention that she devoted to her former occupation of nursing.

We trust that your presence and help in the church and district will in some measure fill up the gap caused by the removal of your beloved and highly respected Father and Mother and other members of your family.

We bespeak for you both much blessing and great joy in your married life.

(Signed) W. S. Edgar, pastor; Leila Sanderson, Beatrice McGregor, A. I. Edmison.

SECOND KLONDIKE MAY BE UNCOVERED

Peterboro Man, Who Has Been on the Ground, is Very Optimistic.

That a second Klondike may be discovered shortly in the Cassiar District of Northern British Columbia is the opinion of Mr. H. J. D. Neal, 697 George street, city. Mr. Neal has been through this territory and also made two trips to the Klondike. Placer gold if more easily mined than the quartz and does not require smelting. Mr. Neal is very enthusiastic about the new field where his partner is located and expects to make a return trip in the near future. His letter and reply from the Minister of Mines at Ottawa throws considerable light on the situation. The letters follow:

697 George Street,
Peterboro, Ont.
Nov. 14, 1924

Minister of Mines,
Parliament Buildings,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir:—

Within the last three weeks I have received reports from parties residing on Wrangell Island—an island lying off the Alaskan Pan-handle 15 miles south of the mouth of the Stikine River—to the effect that a greate placer gold strike has been made in the vicinity of Eagle Creek, in the Cassiar District of Northern British Columbia.

One of these reports, the one, by the way, that I have the most reasons for believing, states among othed things tha hits strike is the most important strike of its kind since the Klondyke strike of 1897, and that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are taking the same steps to control and regulate the stampede thereto—which acocrding to this particular report is already well under way—as they did in the case of the famous stampede to the Klondyke twenty-seven years ago.

Owing to the nature of discoveries that I made myself in the Cassiar Mountains—in the Yukon Territory—two years ago last September, I expected that a strike of considerable importance would be made somewhere in the Cassiar District sooner or later, and now that such a strike has been made, I would like to get whatever information first-hand or otherwise, that you may be in a position to give me regarding same.

Respectfully yours,
H. J. D. NEAL.

Ottawa, Nov. 19th, 1924.

H. J. D. Neal, Esq.,
697 George Street,
Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Sir:—

I have your letter of November 14th, asking for information regarding a placer gold strike in the neighborhood of Eagle Creek, in the Cassiar District.

In reply to your enquiry I wish to say that we have no first-hand information regarding the value of this strike, but while I was in British Columbia during the month of October I met the original discoverer of this new field,—a man by the name of Grady. The location of the new strike is said to be about sixteen miles from the head of Dease lake on a tributary of Eagle river. The discovery was made by Grady and his partner on August 17th, 1924, and in the course of two days' work on the creek they were able to recover about $60 in gold by sluicing. The gold obtained was fairly coarse, one nugget being about $5.00 in value. As soon as Grady's discovery became known at Telegraph creek parties started out for the new field, and within a short time the whole of the tributary stream, six miles in length, was staked, and about two miles of Eagle river. The discovery appears to be one of some importance, but to say that it is the greatest since the Klondyke in 1897 would be, I think, overstating the case.

I have no knowledge as to what action the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are taking with regard to the influx of prospectors, but I should think that if a large number were going in the police would be very likely to take steps to see that prospectors were properly equipped, and that they would not be likely to become a charge on the country by going in unprepared.

Yours very truly,
CHARLES CAWSELL,
Deputy Minister.

BEST DRESSED WOMAN IS DEAD

Mrs. Smith-Wilkinson Dazzled London and Paris With 1,000 Gorgeous Gowns.

AMASSED $40,000,000.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—Mrs. Edward H. Smith-Wilkinson, of Nottingham, who caused a sensation a year ago in Paris and London as the world's greatest spender and owner of more than one thousand dresses.

It was her boast that she never wore a dress more than once. She dazzled Paris with the extravagant way in which she spent $40,000,000. She gained her riches by speculating in hotel stock. Her unstinted purchase of Paris gowns and headgear made her known as "the best dressed woman in the world."

Dazzled Victory Ball.

Mrs. Smith-Wilkinson had London society grasping when, at the 1921 Victory Ball in Albert Hall, she appeared in a diamond-beaded gown valued at $5,000,000. She appeared like a dazzling shaft of light.

Some of the jewels were once part of the Romanoff jeweled crown, once prized trinket of the Czars of Russia. She said the jewels were purchased from the wife of the late ex-Czar's secretary.

Twelve birds of paradise adorned one hat Mrs. Smith-Wilkinson purchased in Paris for $10,000.

Cancelled U.S. Visit.

At that time she said she was coming to New York to show the Four Hundred how to dress; but changed her mind for some unknown reason. About criticism of her extravagances in London papers she said:

"I think it is very naughty for people to write things like that about me. I don't deserve it and it is my own money. People say such horrid things, I feel as if I'd like to be a recluse and never go out again."

She was reported as giving her third husband a few shillings a week, which he was allowed for acting as gardener at their country home in Nottingham.

THE THIEF OF BAGDAD

BY ACHMED ABDULLAH

"Why—the pretensions of this Mongol are absolutely preposterous! Saved Zobeid's life, did he? By Shiva. There is hardly a Brahmin or holy fakir in Hindustan who is not familiar with Sanjivnividya—the science of restoring the dead to life!"

"Pardon me," sneered the Mongol, "but why did you not use this marvellous science?"

"Partly because, in my excitement and grief, I did not happen to think of it; and partly because, knowing that Zobeid would marry me, I did not wish to rob you of the glory of having cured—ah!"—he smiled like the cat that has stolen the cream—"the future Queen of India. For I claim Zobeid's hand. Here"—as he gave the magic crystal to Zemzem—"is the greatest rarity on earth! Without its help we would not have known of Zobeid's terrible plight! She is mine—mine—mine!"

"There is something in what you say," admitted the Caliph. He turned to his daughter. "Zobeid, I really believe that he is right and that . . ."

"Wait a moment! Just wait a moment!" cut in the Prince of Persia. "A fiddlestick for magic globe and magic apple! Valuable—I grant. Also interesting. But it was my magic flying carpet which brought us here in time to save the Princess' life. Here"—as he spread the rug in front of the couch—"is the greatest treasure, the rarest gift in the Lord Allah's Creation! By its token I claim your daughter's hand, O Caliph of all the Faithful!"

"By the honor of my beard," said the latter. "The Persian, too, is right!"

"But, father, dear! I am an obedient daughter. Still—I cannot marry the three of them, can I?"

"Hardly!" admitted the Caliph.

"Then—what shall I do?"

"You are mine!" cried the Indian.

"Mine!" exclaimed the Persian.

"Mine! Mine own!" growled the Mongol.

They surrounded the Caliph, clamoring, arguing, quarrelling, protesting. They drew him to one side while the Princess, obeying a sudden impulse, turned to Zemzem.

"Quick!" she whispered. "Before they notice! Ask the magic crystal to show us what Ahmed is doing."

Zemzem was sitting cross-legged in front of the couch, her back to the others so that they could not see. She spoke low words to the crystal. She stared into it. Then she looked up excitedly.

"Heaven-Born!" came her sibilant murmur. "The Thief of Bagdad is on his way home!"

"Oh——" Zobeid forced back the exclamation.

"Yes. He flies. Flies through the air—mounted on a great white horse with shiny silver wings! Over valley he flies—and desert! West he flies—home—to Bagdad—astride his great, winged horse!"

Zobeid laughed aloud with happiness. She called to the Caliph: "Father! Father, dear!"

"Yes, little daughter?" he asked, turning. "What is it?"

"Here am I," she laughed again, "like a donkey between three bundles of hay—and I do not know how to choose."

"Not a very flattering comparison to yourself," smiled the Caliph of Bagdad.

"Nor to my three suitors, I am afraid," Zobeid went on, "for they represent the three bundles of hay. Without the Indian's crystal, they could not have known of my plight. Without the Persian's carpet, they could not have come here so quickly. And without the Mongol's apple, they could not have cured me. Which of the three shall I choose?"

"If you choose one, the other two will object," replied her father, wearily. "They have already deafened me with their arguing and counter-arguing, their accusations and counter-accusations." He sighed. "Oh—I am so tired!"

"So am I," said the Princess. "Let us all go to sleep. To-morrow will be time enough to decide."

"A good idea, daughter!"

Still grumbling, the three Princes assented. They left the apartment. But the Mongol, after bowing good-night to Zobeid, stopped for a moment near the window, as if wishing to look at the glorious view of Bagdad, golden and green beneath the setting sun. Three times he waved his handkerchief. He smiled thinly, cruelly, as almost immediately from a tower nearby an immense, triangular, red-and-gold flag was dipped—three times—in answer. He knew that flag. The battle flag of his race. It was stiff with gold; stiffer with gore.

Whatever the morrow's decision, Zobeid would be his. Night would come soon. Bagdad would fall asleep. And then his Mongol warriors jumping to arms—the attack!

Again he bowed before the Princess, and left.

Alone with Zemzem, Zobeid stared into the magic crystal; stared into it to her heart's content.

Ahmed had flown down from the sky, not far from an enormous defile. He had dismounted from his winged horse.

"Why," exclaimed the Princess, "look Zemzem! He is talking to the horse! And—look, look! The horse seems to reply!"

"Impossible!" cried Zemzem. "I can imagine Ahmed talking to the horse. But—the horse replying to Ahmed . . . ? Why—it sounds like a fairy tale. It cannot be."

But, Zemzem's doubt notwithstanding, it was.

For as the ancient Arab chronicle comments:

"When the impossible happens, it exists. A stone swims in the water, when eyes behold the fact of it. A monkey sings a Kashmiri love song, when ears hear the fact of it. Only idiots, old spinsters, cats, and learned professors contradict the testimony of their own five senses."

Indeed, having reached the western end of the Valley of the Seven Temptations, the horse had flown to earth, and when Ahmed had dismounted had said to him, speaking in fair Arabic:

"I am, as you know, the Horse of Winged Imagination. At this side of the valley imagination ceases and, stretching to the West, to Bagdad, begins the life and world of hard facts. Back yonder you have learned several lessons, overcoming your pride, your envy, your jealousy, and gaining faith in Allah and the Prophet Mohammed—on Him the salute!—as well as resignation to the sendings of Fate. You also acquired two treasures—the silver box and the cloak of invisibility, which latter, by the way, as you will learn presently, shields your soul from the infamous lies and envy and hate of worthless people. I cannot carry you any farther. For I am wanted back yonder, near the shore of the Midnight Sea, where another mortal is waiting for me to help him back across the abyss of black desires which, single-handed, even as you did, he conquered and crossed. Salaam aleykum!"

Without waiting for the Thief of Bagdad to reply, the Horse of Winged Imagination spread wide its splendid shining pinions, rose into the air in a graceful curve, turned East, and soon was nothing but a tiny speck of silver against the vaulting purple of the evening sky.

The Thief of Bagdad was alone.

He felt conscious of a certain sharp clutch and lift at the heart; a certain fear; a certain nervous apprehension as to what the future might bring. These seven months he had lived in a dim, motley, coiling world of wizardy where currents of primeval, cosmic earth life had tugged at his inmost self, changing portions of this self, changing his very soul—giving him a new soul. Now his new soul of Ahmed, the Thief of Bagdad, faced once more the old facts of life; this new soul felt like an alien amongst the old facts of life.

He looked to the West.

There leagues of beach-wood poured down the slope of the hills in an enormous cataract of green and black-green foam, smothered farther down in an exuberance of blue and golden flowers. Beyond it stretched the desert; and across the desert cut a narrow caravan trail—the road to Bagdad.

Bagdad! Hundreds of miles away!

With the thought came a sharp and bitter pain. Why—he said to himself—it was near the end of the seventh moon. To-morrow was the last day. Had he then conquered himself only to lose what he loved most on earth—Zobeid? Yet, even with the pain gnawing at his heart and soul, he bowed his head in resignation to the decrees of Fate, and gave thanks to Allah:

"Say: He is the One God; God the Eternal! He beggeteth not, nor is begotten. Nor is there one like unto Him! Verily I declare that He is the One God and that Mohammed is the Messenger of God!"

Then he squared his shoulders. Hundreds of miles to Bagdad, across desert and forest and mountain and desert again, and only one day to cover the distance. It was impossible. But he must try. So he stepped out, into the world of facts. He put his feet on the road of life; life that, as he descended the slope of the hill, pulsed everywhere about him, immense in power, moving swiftly, surging close to his heels and hands and heart, striding behind him and before, urging him on.

On he walked through the night, hungry, tired, his feet sore and bleeding, until very slowly the dawn of morning came with fantastic, purple skies and the sun racing along the rim of the horizon in a sea of red and gold.

Then, at the edge of the desert, he saw a great gate of horn and ivory athwart the trail. The gate opened, and from it came the hermit whom, seven months earlier, he had met after he had passed through the defile of the Hill of Eternal Fire, the Hill of Pride.

Ahmed was about to walk on with a curt: "Salaam Aleykum!"

But the hermit stopped him with a gesture of his thin, high-veined hands.

"Why—Ahmed!" he exclaimed, rather hurt. "I am glad to see you! Glad that you made the wondrous journey in safety! Come—and swap the time of day with an old friend!"

Ahmed shook his head.

"I am sorry," he replied. "But I am in a devilish hurry. I have only about twelve hours in which to walk nearly seven hundred miles. Besides, my feet burn like fire. Besides, I am hungry enough to eat a stewed mule. Besides . . ."

"Besides you are a fool!" interrupted the hermit.

"Thanks for the compliment!"

"No compliment intended. I am stating a fact. Thief of Bagdad—aren't you?"

"Well—used to be. What about it?"

"I cannot help wondering," laughed the hermit, "that, during your former light-fingered career, you got away without being caught time and again. Why—you have not even an ounce of mother's wit."

"Insults are no argument. Kindly explain!" demanded Ahmed stiffly.

"Here you have the magic silver box—I can see it sticking out of your waist shawl—and you have not even enough sense to use it."

"Use it?"

"Yes. Open it. Don't you know what is inside?"

"Happiness—also honor, I was told."

"Rightly told! But, Ahmed, happiness is a helpmeet to those who deserve it—as you deserve it, having conquered your own self. And honor, too, helps in life's struggles. Honor is really a very practical and constructive virtue. Fine ideals always are. That is exactly where cynical philosophers are wrong. Look!"—as Ahmed opened the little silver box—"do you see the tiny yellow seeds?"

"What are they?"

"They are seeds from the Flower of Unfulfilled by Righteous Desire. Throw a seed on the ground. Wish hard. And if the wish be just and right, a puff of smoke will rise from the earth where the seed struck it, and at once you will have your wish fulfilled. Why"—as Ahmed hesitated—"don't you believe me? Try it! Wish! Wish hard!"

"Very well," replied Ahmed; and, raising his hands to heaven, he exclaimed: "I want a horse—a horse swift as the wind, to cover the distance between here and Bagdad before the day is over. And I also want a square meal. For I am terribly hungry!"

He took one of the little seeds, dropped it, and at once a puff of smoke rose from the ground, and there stood a tall, splendid, broad-backed Marwari stallion, black with a white star on the forehead, white stockings, dainty but strong hocks, and gorgeously saddled and bridled.

"By Allah!" cried Ahmed. "The silver box works!"

He dropped another seed; came another puff of smoke; and a table came out of the nowhere, covered with snowy linen, glass, silver, fruit, drink, and platters of steaming food.

"Come, wise hermit!" laughed Ahmed. "Be my guest! Here is food enough for two!"

They ate. Then the hermit blessed Ahmed, who mounted the stallion and was off.

The horse paced away faster than the wind—faster and faster—a mile at a jump—a mile at a leap—a mile at each stretch of its splendid, steely body.

Ahmed rode as he had never ridden before. He rode with a song in his heart. For here was his Fate blazing ahead of him like a sacred Grail; and, through the velvety glow of the sun, through the purple shadows of the low, volcanic hills which flanked the road and which danced like hobgoblins among the dwarf aloes, through the click-clanketty-click of the stallion's dancing feet, there came to him the clarion call to life's happiness and life's work and life's fulfilment.

The farther west he rode, the clearer became the singing joy in his heart.

Click-clantetty-click spoke the horse's dancing feet. A gecko stepped away through the brush. A low-flapping bird brushed his face. The sun bored down with a brutish, flaming gesture.

There were few signs of life. Once in a while a carrion-hawk poised high in the parched, blue sky above him. Twice he passed Tartar camel riders, short, lean, brown, bow-legged men, whose jaws and brows were bound mummy fashion against the stinging sand of the desert, and who touched their rosary beds with superstitious awe as the wild horseman swept past them, faster than the North wind.

HOLD SHORT COURSE.

South Monaghan and Cavan Young Folks Take Interest in Meeting.

BAILIEBORO, Dec. 6.—A meeting was held in the Municipal Hall at Centreville to decide the possibilities of holding a short course in agriculture for the young men of the community and a course in sewing and domestic science for the young ladies.

There was an excellent attendance of the younger element of South Monaghan and Cavan present at the meeting.

Mr. Wilfred Brown acted as chairman, while Mr. F. C. Patterson, district representative of Port Hope, was present and explained to the young folk the benefits that could be derived from a short course, and also the way in which the course will be conducted.

After considerable discussion it was finally decided to hold the course at Bailieboro. It is generally thought that there will be no trouble in securing sufficient boys and girls to carry on a full class of both sexes.

Messrs. Harold Bebee and MacIntosh Bradshaw were appointed to see about securing a hall, and also to do all that was in their power to make this course a success.

Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the U. F. Y. P. O. Club was held in their hall at South Monaghan on Thursday evening.

The president, Harold Bebee, occupied the chair, and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Hon. President—Rev. A. H. McConnachie.

President—Harold Bebee.

Vice-President—Fred. Barnard.

Secretary-Treasurer—Miss C. McConnachie.

The general programme committee appointed for the first month was as follows: Miss Rose Kidd, Harry Campbell, Roy Rutherford, F. Barnard.

Owing to the fact that a number of the active members who belonged to the club last year have moved from this vicinity, the club feel that they are not strong enough to enter the Peterboro County Debating League this year.

It was also decided that instead of holding debates every meeting night, that one member of the club should read a certain subject, sent out by head office of the United Farmers of Toronto, and the rest of the members should engage in an open discussion.

It is hoped that although the membership is now rather small, that it will increase as the meetings go by, and that this year will be made most successful through the untiring efforts of the few faithful members.

ALCHEMY.

Bankers are a bit worried about the German engineer who is believed to have discovered how to turn quicksilver into gold. His process costs over two million dollars a pound, but it is not impossible that the cost could be reduced to a matter of cents.

Gold is worth $331 a pound, quicksilver less than $1 a pound. You picture a German chemist taking tons of mercury, magically turning it into gold and paying the indemnity in a lump. This is not as "impossible" as the airplane was 50 years ago.

BABY BUNNY, 467 LBS., MARRIES PETE, 58 LBS.

PETE ROBINSON, 58 POUNDS, AND HIS BRIDE, BABY BUNNY SMITH, 467 POUNDS, ON THEIR HONEYMOON.

By GENE COHN.

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—Mrs. Peter Robinson (nee Baby Bunny Smith, weight 467 pounds) was shaking the bed sheets in a feverish effort to find her newly-achieved 58-pound husband.

"I hope I didn't roll over in the night," she said in a worried voice, and her agitation seemed quite natural considering that they had been married but 12 hours.

"You see," she continued, "he's the only living skeleton alive today and a big sideshow attraction. He's really very valuable. And, besides, he's my husband and I love him."

At this moment, however, Pete Robinson, one of the most famous of sideshow freaks, swung leisurely out from between the mattress and the bedspring in time to tell the romantic story of the love of a circus "fat lady" for a "human skeleton."

"Don't worry me like that, dear," she reprimanded, "I might lose weight and then where would we be?"

"Well, we met about five years ago in a side show," began Robinson.

But the missus interrupted him with: "Yes, and he was in love with Sweet Adeline, another fat girl, and I cut her out. He's always preferred eight of them. Believe me, all the fat girls. He's been in love with sideshow girls were after Pete. He's one of the biggest money makers in the business. Human skeletons aren't common like tattooed men and dwarfs."

"Yes," smiled the groom, "I had known Sweet Adeline for 12 years—you see, I've been on exhibition for 25 years. But when Baby Bunny came along I pined away three pounds and increased my value 40 per cent. It looked like she never would marry me—but at last I won her heart. And she is such a grand cook—"

"But suppose she feeds you too well and you gain weight?" suggested the interviewer.

Both bride and groom shivered at the prospect.

"Was this your first love?" the interviewer asked of the Junoesque Babe.

"No, I was married once before. But that was when I was thin and men were not so hard to get. You see I only became a really fat, fat girl about five or six years ago. At birth I weighed but a pound and three quarters and the doctors said that it was some gland in the back of the neck, or something."

"Now how about a honeymoon?" the reporter went on.

"That's the trouble—there's no place we haven't been. I guess we'll rest, for we have to go out with the circus again in the spring, and won't I have it on the sideshow gals—?" Babe fairly glowed.

Pete, meanwhile, had coyly and modestly disappeared behind the hat rack.

A RED BLOOD FOOD FOR FEEBLE OLD FOLKS

Doctors say that one of the most frequent causes of feeble, sickly, run-down conditions in old people is thin, pale blood, lacking in strength-building power. In many cases, as people grow older, the iron in the blood is partly used up without being replaced, and even the most nourishing foods will do you little good until you get back this lost iron, without which the blood cannot be rich, red and strengthening. With plenty of iron in the blood a man or woman may be young, vigorous and healthy at 70 or 80—while at 30 or 40 with a deficient supply of iron people may look and feel 10 to 20 years older than they really are.

For it is the iron in your blood that enables it to change food into firm, healthy tisues and promotes vigorous energy and endurance. And when this supply of iron runs low, nothing you eat does you the proper amount of good. You simply cannot get strength out of it and you grow weak, feeble and sickly, and suffer from various sorts of distressing symptoms and ailments.

In such cases all you need is more iron—organic iron—to give you plenty of the rich red blood and energy that insure you a strong, vigorous, healthful old age. But be sure that you take only true organic iron—Nuxuated Iron—and not the ordinary mineral iron that people have used in the past. Nuxuated Iron is a wonderful new combination of organic iron, just like the iron in your blood. It does not injure the teeth or disturb the stomach. Try it just two weeks and you'll be amazed how much younger and better you feel, and what a marvelous new tingle of of strength and vitality it fills your entire being. Nuxated Iron is sold under an absolute guarantee of satisfaction or your money back. At all good druggists.

MURDER.

For armies and navies the world is now spending 2900 million dollars a year. A century at this rate will eat up about as much as the World War. Even three or four years of it is as much as the Allies will ever get out of Germany.

Thirty feet of rope, properly applied to the necks of a few hundred politicians and bankers in Europe and Asia, would stop this mad war spending. Trouble is, their successors would soon be at it again. It seems to be the unsolvable problem in all generations. Its cause is in the fetish called "patriotism."

MAYOR TURNER GAVE ADDRESS

"A Recipe For a Model City" Was His Subject.

Mayor J. J. Turner was the speaker at the Friday evening supper meeting at the Y.M.C.A. and gave an inspiring address on the subject, "A Recipe for a Model City." Some very practical suggestions were presented, and the address held the attention of the audience from start to finish. There was a large attendance, 47 being present. The Collegiate Rugby team were the guests of the Association. A presentation was made by R. G. Scott, vice-president of the Peterboro Tennis Club, to R. Sturgeon, winner of the junior and intermediate championships of the Y.M.C.A. for the year 1924. The Peterboro Lawn Tennis Association generously offered a membership in their club to the winner of the junior championship of the Y. M. C. A. Mr. Scott accompanied the presentation with some valuable suggestions regarding tennis. Rev. J. W. Gordon was introduced to the gathering and was informed of the purpose of the meeting by Graham Eastwood. Dr. F. C. Neal spoke on behalf of the Rugby team and Walter Rye introduced the players. Mr. J. F. H. Wallace, the popular chairman, handled the meeting in his own efficient and happy style. The speaker for next Friday's meeting will be announced early in the week.

TO EJECT FOREIGNERS.

A Group of Fifty Agitators Started Over Frontier To-day.

PARIS, Dec. 6.—(Canadian Press) Herriot government has decided to suppress communist agitation in France which was evidenced strikingly by demonstration at Jaures Pantheon ceremony and more recently on occasion of Ambassador Krassins arrival from Moscow.

A large number of foreign agitators to be expelled from country. First group of fifty being started over frontier to-day. To reporters last night Herriot said following his interview yesterday with British Foreign Secretary Chamberlain.

"Mr. Chamberlain and I readily agreed to necessity of putting down Bolshevik activities. We are obliged to employ in France large body of foreign workmen and it is among them that the elements of disorder are recruited. We need and will have proper immigration policy."

French Deputies Again—Former Enemy Reporters

PARIS, Dec. 6.—Correspondents repesnting newspapers of former enemy countries will be permitted to resume their seats in the press galleries of the French chamber of deputies and the senate when parliament reconvenes after the New Year's recess. These correspondents have been barred since August 1919. Germany probably will give five admission cards, Austria two, and Bulgaria one. There is no application from Turkey. Russia, which has been barred since the Soviet revolution, will also be permitted to have press representatives present.

Burnall Fuel Saver Co.,
Toronto, Ontario.
Gentlemen:—
Report of Tests made on the Kewanee Fire Box Steam Boiler at the Warehouse, George Street, before and after installation of the BURNALL DEVICE.

The Burnall Fuel Saver was installed by the local representative, Mr. H. C. Pawson, on the understanding that a saving of not less than 20 per cent in fuel would result, and that, consequently, there would be less ash, clinkers eliminated almost entirely, the demonstration to be at the entire risk and expense of the Burnall Company.

We are very pleased to state that the Test and results from the installation at the Warehouse, and also at Store No. 662, East Toronto, have proved entirely satisfactory, and we take pleasure in recommending the Burnall Device as a distinct saver of Fuel and Labor; and giving much more uniform heating.

We are contemplating the installation of the Burnall Device on the balance of our Heating Plants in the City of Toronto.

DO NOT FEAR DUMPING.

Germany Will Not Be Able to Compete For Some Time to Come.

BERLIN, Dec. 6. — (Canadian Press). — Other nations need not fear danger of German "dumping" after January 10th, when the most-favored-nation clause granted the signers of the Versailles treaty, expires, the Ministry of Commerce declared yesterday. For a long time, in the Ministry's opinion, Germany will not be able to compete: first, because the German industry is loaded down with reparation obligations; second, interest charges are from ten to twelve per cent., whereas in other countries they are only from four to six per cent.; third, the country's social burdens are such that sick and old age insurance is heavier than anywhere else in the world; and, fourth, taxation is assessed on turnover and wealth, irrespective of profit.

THE ACID TEST.

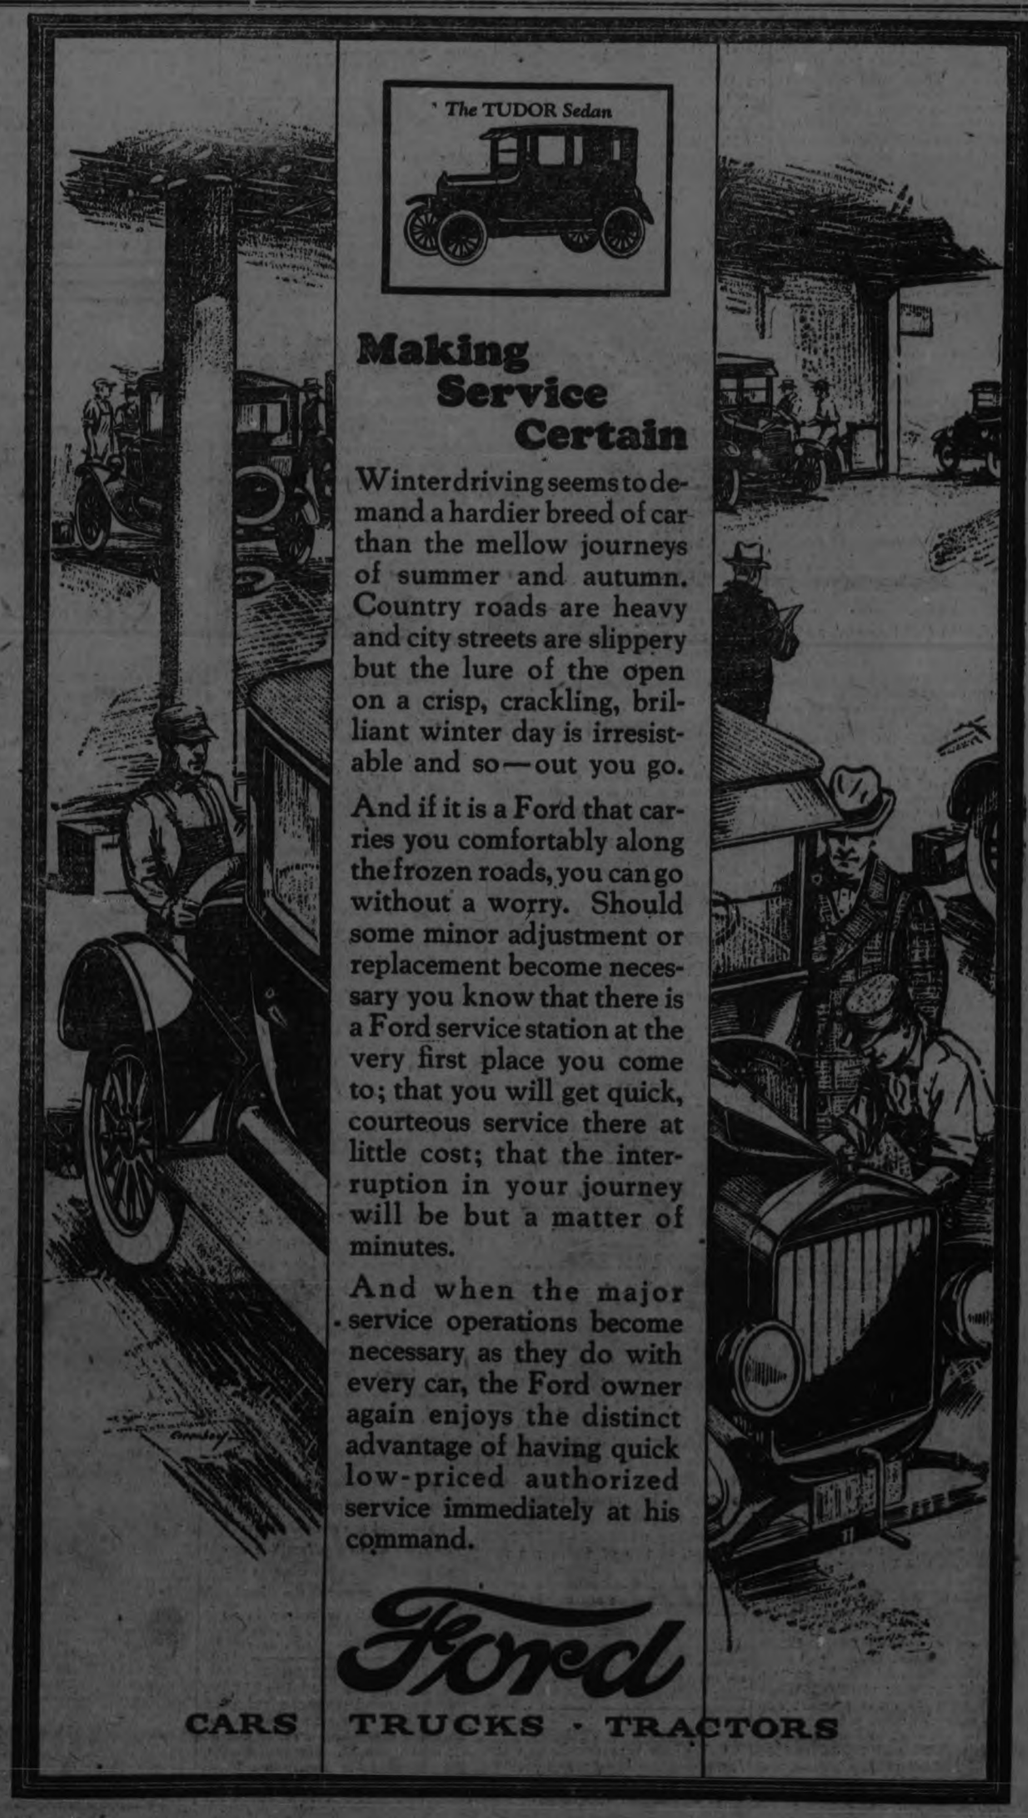
(By Cynthia Grey)

When a girl thinks that a man has played around her long enough and that the time has come for him to take her or leave her, she usually asks him over to Sunday night suppers.

Gorged with mother's cold roast beef, potato salad and layer-cake he will be led to father's easy chair and foot-stool and presented with a 50-cent cigar.

Then, as he leans back, looks into the flames and tells the story of his life while his cutie breathlessly listens, it may occur to him that this is a "quiet evening at home," and that no bachelor ever has them.

But if he does not do a Steve Brodie then, he never will. And daughter will do well to class him with all the rest of the "drug store sheiks" and waste no more time or Sunday suppers on him.



ROTARY ANNES HELD A DANCE

The Rose Ball the big opening dance of the season held in the G.W.V.A. hall last evening under the auspices of the Rotary Annes and attended by over three hundred people was a real success. The arrangements made by the ladies in charge left nothing to be desired, there were plenty of lovely frocks to match the floral setting achieved by the decorating committee, the music and refreshments were excellent and everyone appeared to have a thoroughly good time.

The decorations were as artistic as usual with this society, even surpassing those of last year in dainty effect. Pink roses were the keynote of the scheme, and rose pink was the color of the invitation cards and the dance programmes. Pink roses studded the latticed orchestra corner banked with evergreens, placed at the north west section of the hall, pink roses were entwined with long interlacing streamers of green moss that crossed the hall overhead, there were pink blossoms in the evergreen that filled the windows and bordered the doors, and very effective standing lamps were contrived of huge single roses, the green stem serving as a standard, the light placed inside enormous rose petals. Conventional green trees with the same bright blossoms were placed at intervals about the hall. Window curtains of crickled pink paper were caught back with clusters of roses and the overhead were arranged with two shades of rose paper in streamers gave them the effect of huge pendant tassels.

The ladies' parlor at the rear of the hall was converted into a very dainty lounge room. Pink roses were much in evidence here also, trailing over latticed screens and filling tall wicker standards and hanging baskets. Handsome rugs and lounging chairs, rose-shaded lights ferns and palms, made this a delightful little retreat.

The guests were received by the president Mrs. Reg. H. Turner, with Mrs. J. H. Seels, Mrs. F. L. Roy, Mrs. C. G. Graham and Mrs. Gerald McClelland. There were a number of novelty prize dances, including a lucky balloon dance, won by Mrs. Homer Meyers dancing with Mr. D. Carlisle and a birthday dance won by Miss Long and Mr. Fowler. A special Rose Ball favor dance had fans as favors for the ladies and rose balls filled with confetti for their partners. Ken Blood's orchestra provided splendid music for the dancing programme, which opened with a Grand March.

Arrangements for the very artistic decorations were in the hands of Mrs. J. H. Seels; Mrs. Gerald McClelland supervised the refreshment committee; Mrs. S. D. Hall had the arrangement of the lounge room, and Mrs. C. G. Graham was convenor of the dance. Mrs. R. H. Turner acted as general convenor.

Among those present were noticed:—

LANGUID PATRONAGE FOR FARMERS' WARES

Eggs Started at 75 Cents, But Dropped Discouraged to 65 Cents a Dozen.

Buying on the farmers' market was slow this morning. The tables in the basket section were loaded with fowl that had a languid patronage. Prices on poultry were slightly lower this morning. Turkeys could be bought at 30 cents a pound, with 33 and 35 cents asked for young birds. Chickens were generally priced at 20 cents a pound. One enterprising lady was asking 25 cents a pound for her stock, but they were trussed neatly and drawn, with their "innards" strapped tightly to their exteriors, for all to observe. Geese were 20 and 25 cents a pound and ducks 27 and 28 cents.

Butter was 38 and 40 cents a pound and eggs started in at 75 cents, sinking later to 65 cents a dozen.

Several sales of home-made cooking were holding sway upstairs this morning, and one group of ladies had a display of Christmas novelties, including a little white linoleum-covered cook-book bordered with Chinese characters in Celestial blue and a sleeping doll much admired by a small boy.

Downstairs, there were Christmas trees at 25 and 50 cents apiece. A single load of hay was priced at $16 and loads of wood had a wide range in price. Hardwood, cut in stove lengths, was $9 and $10 a load and an over-size load of maple, in three-foot lengths was $13.

Potatoes were 80 and 85 cents a bag and not very plentiful. White beans were 15 cents a quart and roots were the usual prices.

There was pork in front and hind sections at 15 and 17, 15 and 18 and 16 and 18 cents a pound, and beef was 8 and 10 cents a pound.

The fish man had flat white plaice at 15 cents a pound, silvery-coated sea salmon at 18 cents and white fish at 20 cents a pound.

McIntosh Red apples were 70 cents a peck, Tolman Sweets 60 cents, Greenings 45, and Russets 50 cents. Peewaukees by the bag were priced at $2.50, Bellflowers were $2.75, and Russets $2.40. Wealthies were 35 cents a peck, and a good looking twenty-ounce Pippin was 50 cents. Small green pears were 50 and 60 cents a peck.

Fawn and white Indian Runner ducks, beautifully marked, preening themselves after a long cold drink, were $1.50 apiece, the same price as the Rhode Island Red fowls across the way. Barred Rocks were $3 each. Homing pigeons were a quarter apiece.

A pair of twins were on the market this morning, Clarence and Clifford, with bright eyes and freckled faces. Their mother admitted getting mixed up in their identity at times. The teachers had occasion recently to keep Clarence in after school. She called Clifford by mistake and Clifford accordingly stayed in, while Clarence skipped home.

BOSTON FACES A CRIME WAVE

Revolvers Stolen From State Armory—200 Extraa Police Wanted.

FOUR HOLD-UPS.

BOSTON, Dec. 6. — (Canadian Press.)—The police of Greater Boston are faced by a crime wave which for several weeks, besides the work of special protection in the chinese quarter because of Tong activities and the newly imposed duty of liquor law enforcement under the 'baby Volstead law' has called them to all parts of the district where hold-ups and robberies have been made by armed thugs with growing frequency.

Yesterday was marked by four hold-ups, in two of which the victims were seriously beaten, and the larceny of nine .45 calibre automatics from the state armory in Cambridge.

To meet the situation Police Commissioner Wilson has asked for 200 more officers, and patrolmen have orders to carry their revolvers in their outside pockets.

USE COLD WATER.

Cold water is preferable to warm for scrubbing boards and wooden dishes since it does not sink into the wood and dries very quickly.

A WORK OF ART.

Is the Display Window of Irwin's Men's Wear Shop.

The man who dressed the north window of Irwin's Men's Wear Shop, 337 George street, has succeeded in presenting an appealing example of clever display in the art creative class.

Adopting the quiet color scheme of black and white, relieved by but one little touch of red, he has skilfully created a charming picture of refined elegance in men's toggery, which irresistibly arrests and holds the attention of passers by. Black satin draping, brightened here and there with perpendicular silver stripes, constitute an unobtrusive but effective background for a tasteful grouping of men's distinctive evening wear. One sees in imposing evidence elegant tuxedo suits, exquisite white vests and gloves dainty black and white scarves, black top coats and hats, appropriate ties and superfine dress shirts, to say nothing of the indispensable collar. Nothing is missing that discriminsocial functions where correct tail-social functions where carred tail-oring and corresponding haberdashery are called for.

A trip up town tonight to see this exemplary example of the window decorating art would be really worth while. For while there is nothing Christmasy about it in the ordinary acceptance of the term, still its timely and forceful suggestion of Yuletide festivities is pleasing in the extreme, and reflects a degree of artistry in design and execution one does not see every day.

Bar Cross Word Puzzles From Library's Shelves

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6. — (United News.)—Cross word puzzle books have been barred from the Washington public library. When the library staff brought up the question of purchasing cross word puzzle books for the library shelves, Dr. Geo. F. Bowerman, librarian, returned an emphatic "no."

"I don't believe cross word puzzles increase ones vocabulary, at least insofar as words of practical use are concerned," he said, when the familiar apology of puzzle hounds was offered. "Anyway, the books would be all marked up in no time."

ANNUAL MEETING LOCAL SKI CLUB

George Logan Elected President—To Double the Membership.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Peterboro Ski and Snowshoe Club was held on Wednesday evening in the board room of the Chamber of Commerce with a good representation of enthusiastic promoters of these healthful winter sports in attendance. This sport of skiing which broke upon the youth of this city last winter when the Ski Club was formed, has made wonderful headway and before the snow had vanished last year the club had enrolled over eighty members. while the executive expect to have at least 150 members in their club this winter.

Mr. Jack Verner, manager of the Western Clock Company is very much interested in this line of sport and was right behind every move the club made last year.

The portion of the Western Clock Company which he allowed the club to use last year as a club-room, is now taken up with new machinery, and the club will have to look elsewhere this winter for a meeting place.

The Belmont Club-rooms were mentioned, but whether the club will be able to obtain these rooms to hold the odd dance in, it is not definitely known.

The following officers were elected:

President—George Logan.
Hon. President—Jack H. Verner.
Vice-President—Gerry McClelland.
Hon. Vice-President—Fred Roy.
Secretary-Treasurer — Frank W. White.

Advisory Committee—Fred Green, Doug. Hall, Jack Jobe. Bill Reid, Miss Elva Jackson, Mrs. G. McClelland and Miss L. Littlefield.

Iced Chocolate or Cocoa.

The mixture made by boiling cocoa or chocolate with water and sugar may be used to flavor milk. The desired amount of the chocolate syrup, which usually is one tablespoonful, is stirred into a glass of milk, ice is added, and whipped cream is used as a garnish. Many mothers use a smaller amount of the chocolate to disguise milk, the taste of which some children dislike. The stiffly beaten white of an egg makes a pretty garnish when whipped cream is not available.

Address To St. Andrew

Scotland's Contribution to the Greatness of the British Empire, by Rev. W. S. Edgar, Pastor of Gilmour Memorial Baptist Church at Caledonian Club Supper.

Mr. Chairman and dear fellow Scots, I feel very highly honoured to-night in being asked to give the address to St. Andrew, our Scottish Patron Saint. I take it that this honour has come to me largely because of my nationality. I am a Scot on both my father and my mother's side. I cannot claim any connection with the other parts of the British Isles. I am not like Jack Jones, the Labour M.P., who says he is a four-square Britisher, and claims some connection with the four parts of the British Isles. He says, "I am an Irishman, born in Wales, live in England, and drink Scotch whisky." I cannot claim any of these distinctions. We meet to-night to do honour to St. Andrew, the Patron Saint of Scotland. He was one of the earliest disciples of Christ, and had previously been a disciple of John the Baptist. When the Great Forerunner pointed to Jesus as the Messiah, Andrew left John and followed Jesus.

Tradition says that St. Andrew visited Scotland and preached the Gospel where the city of St. Andrews now stands. The name St. Andrew meets you everywhere in Scotland. We have the city of St. Andrews, St. Andrew's University, St. Andrew's Cross, St. Andrew's flag, and St. Andrew's churches by the hundred. Most of the large cities in Scotland have their St. Andrew's Square.

St. Andrew does not seem to have been a brilliant man; he kept himself in the background, and was decidedly overshadowed by his big brother, Peter whom he was instrumental in introducing to the Master.

Scots, the world over, are noted for two things—love for the old land of the heather, the mountain and flood, and love for their brither Scots. It is these national sentiments, so deeply entrenched in the heart of the Scot, that leads to the formation of such societies as the Caledonians, Sons of Scotland, St. Andrew's Societies, and Burns' Clubs. We meet in these societies to keep alive the grand traditions of our country and to do honour to her great sons and daughters.

We Scots are proud to belong to the great British Empire, on which the sun never sets. Have you ever thought of the great part Scotland has played in bringing about the greatness of that Empire? She has contributed a share altogether beyond her proportion according to size and population. Some people would completely merge Scotland in the predominant partner—England. Some people seem to think that Scotland is a part of England. To my mind, it is the other way about—England is a part of Scotland.

One of my charges in the Old Country was in Rutherglen, on the Clyde. We had there a famous shipbuilder named Tommy Seath. He was a very small man; in fact, he was a dwarf, about 4 ft. high, but a very clever little man. He had not much of a body, but he had a great head. He was called to London on one occasion to give evidence before a Royal Commission in the House of Lords. The Lord Chancellor, who presided, looked at this little man and put the following questions to him: "Your name, sir?" Little Tommy straightened himself up to the full height of his four feet and answered, with some show of dignity, "Thomas B. Seath." "Your occupation?" "Shipbuilder." "Where do you build ships?" "At Rutherglen, your Honour." "Rutherglen—Rutherglen; oh, yes," said the Lord Chancellor; "that's a town near Glasgow." "I beg your pardon, muy Lord," said Tommy, "Glasgow is a town near Rutherglen."

The point of this story is, that Rutherglen was a flourishing town before Glasgow was even a village. So, instead of saying that Scotland is a part of England, I say that England is a part of Scotland. England never conquered Scotland, but Scotland inherited England.

When Queen Elizabeth died and King James the Sixth of Scotland became heir to the throne of England, was not that equivalent to Scotland becoming heir to England. So that, instead of England incorporating Scotland, Scotland really incorporated England. And it was only after Scotland took over England and began to run it, that England became the great country it now is.

The British Royal Family owe their position, as the reigning house, to their connection with the old race of Scottish kings. The uniting of England and Scotland was truly providential, and it proved to be a master-stroke of genius. Up till that time neither country could properly develope itself owing to the almost continuous state of war existing between them. But when the two became one and a true peace was established, then real development and progressive expansion began. From that moment the great British Empire went forward by leaps and bounds, until it became the largest and greatest Empire the world has ever seen.

The Englishman and the Scot make an admirable combination. The spirit of adventure and enterprise in the English and the dour, determined spirit of the Scot produce a type of character that is hard to beat. A famous American professor, a few weeks ago, drew up a list of twelve countries and placed them in order of rank in the production of men of genius. In that list England was first and Scotland second. In the very front rank of men of genius, England leads—Shakespeare, Milton and Sr Isaac Newton stand alone. But in the next rank, Scotland has a goodly showing: Adam Smith, John Knox, James Watt, Burns, Scott, Carlyle, R. L. Stevenson, etc.

For lofty patriots and national heroes, Wallace, Bruce and Douglas are the equal of the best produced by any other country. An Englishman, on one occasion, was recounting to a Scot the names of celebrated Englishmen, and almost every name he mentioned, the Scot had some objection to make. He would say that man was born in Scotland, or his mother was Scotch. At last the Englishman got a little bit exasperated, and he replied, somewhat heatedly, "Well, there's William Shakespeare; you cannot say he was not a pure-bred Englishman?" "No," said the man from the Land of Cakes, "Shakespeare was not a Scot, but he was clever enough to be one!"

During my lifetime I can look back to ten Prime Ministers of Great Britain and no less than six of them were Scots, three were English, and one Welsh. The six Scots Prime Ministers were: Gladstone, Balfour, Lord Rosebery, Campbell-Bannerman, Bonar Law, and Ramsay MacDonald. Of Lord Chancellors, Scotland has had more than her share, not the least distinguished were Lords Findlay, Loreburn and Haldane. The two Archbishops of the Church of England are Scots, Randall Davidson, Archbishop of Canterbury, and Cosmos Gordon Lang, Archbishop of York. Lang also succeeded a Scot, Archbishop McLagon.

In all the wars in which Britain has been engaged, Scottish regiments have played a prominent part. Such names as Black Watch, Gordon Highlander (from whom our chairman of to-night is descended), Camerons, Seaforth, Argyll and Sutherland, Royal Scots, Scots Greys, etc., are world-renowned. They have gathered fame from the great battlefields of history. They have had a worthy share in extending the boundaries of the Empire. In the Great World War, Scotland worthily upheld her martial traditions, and in proportion to population she gave more men to the army than any other part of the Empire. Over 82 per cent. of the available manhood of Scotland was engaged in the war, or about one-sixth of the entire population. She also poured out her treasure with a lavish hand. The most famous Division of the British Army was the 51st, a purely Scottish Division, with the 9th, 25th, and 52nd, also Scottish, not far behind. The Canadian Scots, with their 93rd Highlanders and their 48th Highlanders, and other Canadian Scottish units, also gave a good account of themselves.

In Sir Douglas, now Earl Haig, British Commander-in-Chief, Scotland was also ably and brilliantly represented.

When we turn from the battlefields to the industrial and commercial fields, we find our countrymen forging well to the front. "For peace hath her victories no less renowned than war." For many years, Glasgow-on-the-Clyde has been the leading shipbuilding centre of the world. During the boom years, the Clyde turned out more ships than this whole American continent, many of the most famous ships in both the naval and mercantile marine being built there. The Hood, the greatest battleship afloat, the Tiger and the Barham; the Lusitania, Aquitania and the Carmania, as well as some of the C.P.R. boats, to mention only a few.

The iron and steel industry, the linen and wool trade flourish in Scotland. Singer sewing machines from Clydebank, and the Coats' sewing thread from Paisley, and Scottish tweeds have gone all over the world. And the fact that they come from Scotland is a guarantee of excellence of material and first-class workmanship.

And then we have the rather doubtful fame of Scotland for Scotch whisky. I once heard a drunk man extolling the merits of Scotch whisky, and a friend of mine, who was standing by, asked me what the drunk man was talking about, and I said he is lecturing on the virtues of Scotch whisky and he is full of his subject.

In the realm of invention we have James Watt with his steam engine, which has completely revolutionised modern society and made possible the great industrial and mechanical expansion of the world.

Murdoch, the inventor of gas is also one of us; he shed light on a dark world. The brighter illumination of electricity we owe largely to the indefatigable labours of Lord Kelvin, a Scot, though accidently born in the North of Ireland. Of course, he could not help that, and we forgive him for it. Henry Bell, of the Clyde, gave us the Comet, the first steamboat. His namesake, Graham Bell, of Edinburgh, gave the world the Bell Telephone.

In great surgeons, Scotland has also been rich. Sir James Simpson, of Edinburgh, invented chloroform, and thus saved humanity an immense amount of pain and suffering. Sir William McEwan, of Glasgow, is presently at the head of the surgical profession.

Talking about surgeons reminds me me of a remark made by Sidney Smith. He said it would take a surgical operation to enable a Scotsman to see a joke. But this is a mistake as is testified to by some of the world's greatest orators, who have said that nowhere have they found a more intelligent and appreciative audience, an audience quick to catch a point and see a joke, than in Glasgow and Edinburgh.

But not only so, where will you find greater laughter-makers than Sir Harry Lauder and Neil Kenyon? Where, in Peterboro, will you find greater laughter-makers than the two singing Scots, Messrs. Smith and Hendry. I heard, recently, of an American who came up to a Scot and shook him heartily by the hand, and with tears in his voice said, "I want to thank you Scots' people for giving the world four of its greatest blessings." "And what are they?" asked the astonished Scot. The American replied: "Haggis, golf, bagpipes, and Harry Lauder."

Every little while we come across cheap jokes in the newspapers about the meanness of the Scot. Now, I want to take this opportunity of denying, from intimate knowledge, that this is a libel on the Scottish race. The Scot is not mean; he is careful and prudent, but he is not mean. There is a difference between prudence and meanness. We, Scots, ought not to repeat these jokes, for when people hear a thing over and over again they come to believe it; they eventually think it true, and we ought not to be guilty of circulating a libel on our race. During the war, when public subscriptions were being raised for all sorts of purposes, Scotland gave generously; indeed, she gave far more than her legitimate share.

As far as giving away large sums of money is concerned, I will mention the names of three Scots who have given away, for charitable and educational purposes, as much, if not more, money than any other three of any other single nationality. My three names are: Andrew Carnegie, Lord Rowallan, and Lord Overtoun, with Lord Strathcona a good fourth. Ask the returned Canadian soldiers who were over in Scotland during the war, if they found the Scots mean.

Some may think that my taking this matter seriously is another example of a Scot not being able to see a joke; but it is not so, for I do see the joke, but I think the joke is being carried a little too far. It is used as a butt for ridicule and sarcasm. Now I want you to think with me of the part Scotsmen have played in the development of this, our adopted, country of Canada.

It was a Scot, Sir William Alexander, who founded Nova Scotia and gave it its name, as you all know, which means New Scotland. This was the first purely Scottish colony. The charter for the new colony was obtained from James the First in the year 1621. It was the good work of David Kirke, a Scot, that made possible the victory of Wolfe; therefore he must have a share in the credit of having first placed the ancient capital of Quebec under the sway of Great Britain.

The Plains of Abraham are named after another valiant Scot who played a not inconspicuous part in the early days—Abraham Martin.

In the actual taking of Quebec by Wolfe, the Scots in Wolfe's army contributed not a little to that glorious result. Our distinguished chairman of to-night—Mr. G. N. Gordon—informs me that some of his ancestors were among those very Scots who fought under Wolfe at the battle of Quebec. Of the regiments which took a foremost part in the conquest of Canada, the most famous was the Fraser Highlanders who scaled the rock at Quebec and were first on the top, there to fight and conquer on the Plains of Abraham. With the Frasers were the gallant 42nd, The Black Watch, renowned in military story wherever the British flag has been borne to victory for more than 200 years.

In the fighting which took place at that time, the historian says: "The Highlanders appeared like lions breaking from their chains while desirous of acknowledging the gallant bravery of the other troops, it is surely not too much to claim that the lion's share of the glory was reaped by the hardy sons of the mountain and the heather. They were, in fact, the flower of the army, the boldest in attack, the fiercest at close quarters, and always the bravest of the brave."

History mentions three distinguished Scots named McGill, who were early prominent in Canada. The first was Col. McGill, who was Gen. Simcoe's right hand man in the founding and settling of Toronto. McGill Street, in Toronto, is named after him.

Then there was the Hon. James McGill, founder of McGill University, a native of Glasgow, distinguished for his generosity and public spirit. He was a successful merchant and made a large fortune, most of which he devoted to purposes of education. In the war of 1812, so valuable were his services, that he rose to the position of Brig.-General. He died in 1813 at the age of 67, leaving behind him, in McGill University, a monument more precious and enduring than marble.

The Hon. Peter McGill next engages our attention. Famed for his philanthrophy, who occupied many prominent positions in Montreal, he was mayor of the city, chairman of the first Canadian railway, governor of McGill University, besides many other conspicuous positions which he filled with ability and distinction.

Gen. Sir George Murray, a Perthshire man, who, in 1812, succeeded Brock as Lieut.-Governor of Canada, is worthy of mention here. Sir Alex. McKenzie and Sir John A. McDonald, both of whom became premiers of Canada, were Scots.

Lieut.-Col. John McDonnell, the right hand man to Gen. Brock, fell shortly after Brock at Queenston while gallantly repelling the American invasion, was a native of Inverness, and came from a race of Highland warriors. He was only 25 at the time of his death. Thus a brilliant career was suddenly and tragically brought to an end. Many of the other members of this same McDonnell family distinguished themselves in Canadian history both in peace and war.

Another distinguished Scot who took an active part in the war of 1812 was Sir James Buchanan Macaulay, C.B., a relative of Lord Macaulay, the great British historian. He was educated under the celebrated Dr. Strachan, afterwards Bishop Strachan, another Scot.

William Lyon McKenzie, grandfather of our present premier, McKenzie King, was the first Mayor of Toronto, also first Mayor of Upper Canada. He was a rugged and inflexible Scot. Scottish ministers in Canada are legion; they can be named by the hundred. For many years the Presbyterian Church in Canada was supplied with ministers direct from the Old Land. Think of the influence for good the labours and teaching of those men must have had on succeeding generations of Canadian citizens. Scottish ministers are not confined to the Presbyterian Church—they are found in all the churches in Canada. In my own denomination, the Baptist, I was amazed to find so many Baptist ministers either Scots or of Scottish extraction.

The McKenzie River, larger than the St. Lawrence, was first explored by the Scot whose name it bears. The same is true of the Fraser River, the Simpson River, and the Findlay River. These all afford silent testimony to the indomitable courage and enterprise of the early Scottish pioneers. Time would fail me to mention the Hon. William Morris, Col. G. McDonnell, Gen. Allan, McLean, Hon. Neil McLean, Lord Strathcona and Lord Mount Stephen.

In fact, when studying the early history of Canada to find out the part taken by Scots in the development of this country, one suffers from the embarrassment of riches. Almost every purely Scottish name is mentioned as having some distinguished holder who helped in the conquest and development of this great Dominion of Canada.

And it is due to us Scots, who have made this country the land of our adoption, to carry on the good work of our distinguished Canadian Scottish ancestors, to be true to the great traditions left by them, and to labour for the highest welfare of this great Dominion, and not to rest satisfied until we have built New Jerusalem in Canada's fair and pleasant land.

MARX URGES PEACE.

Concludes Campaign With Abjuration to Peaceable Understanding.

BERLIN, Dec. 6. — (Canadian Press).—Chancellor Marx concluded a prolonged campaign tour last night at Karlsruhe with a stirring appeal to the electorate to support these parties which will ensure the Government a reliable working majority in the Reichstag. "Germany," he said, "needs a Reichstag that will enable it to reach the peaceable understanding with former opponents."

PREMIER REPEATS STAND ON PROBE

Promises To Take Up Stolen Examination Paper Question With Detective.

TORONTO, Dec. 6.—(Special)—In spite of Premier Ferguson's announced attitude that he sees no reason for the publication of the report of Inspector Hammond, of the Provincial police, who investigated the alleged theft of Departmental Examination papers at Peterborough last summer, the Board of Education and parents of pupils in attendance at the Collegiate Institute at that time are demanding to know the result of the investigation.

Feeling is strong that the Board of Education should be advised as to whether or not the offender was discovered, and if so what his identity was. If nothing definite was disclosed to the police by their probe, parents and the board maintain that they have a right to know it.

To the Examiner to-day Premier Ferguson stated that he saw no reason for the publication of the report. "I have wired to say that there is no evidence that any student now in Peterboro was in any way involved in the abstraction of Examination papers," he stated to-day.

"Inspector Hammond is not in town at present, but on his return I shall take the matter up with him again."

Where shall we go this evening?

FREQUENTLY you decide to spend the evening in town with some friend. The first part is easy. Dinner at a pleasant restaurant. But afterwards . . . What will you do to carry on this business of having a good time?

Easy! Three cents. An evening paper. A glance at the advertisements, Suggestion—agreement, and you're off!

You didn't go around to the different theatres, to be driven to an unsatisfactory choice by fatigue and time. If it's worth while to consult the advertisements about amusements, how much worth while must it be when it comes to the spending of he household money.

Read the advertisements. They place before you the full choice of the trustworthy goods in the market. They describe advantages, and give you full information before you have to stir out of your chair. Pursue for every article you buy the method you use when it comes to amusements.

The way to be sure of what you buy is to buy advertised goods.

LINDSAY SHUNS PETERBORO TEAM PREFER THE CANNINGTON GROUP

Consider Local Intermediates Too Strong—Western Section Offers More Games.

ELECT OFFICERS.

Mayor Graham Calls Meeting to Stimulate Interest in Lindsay Hockey.

LINDSAY, December 6. — Mayor Graham's initiative in calling a public meeting for the promotion of local hockey teams, resulted on Thursday night in the election of a strong executive with special committees to handle Intermediate and Junior O.H.A. teams and a town league Ford Moynes said it was useless to try to compete with Peterboro's Intermediates but the juniors had always been to the forefront in any clash with Peterboro.

Peter Spratt, Dr. Lyons and Dr. Shier were deputed to take charge of the Intermediates who perefably will be included in the group with Uxbridge and Cannington.

Supervisors of the Juniors are Messrs. R. I. Moore, H. V. Mercer, H. Baker and H. Woods

Ex-Mayor Frank Carew congratulated Mayor Graham on his interest. It was unique to have a mayor presiding at a hockey meeting and it augured well for the success of hockey in Lindsay this year. He personally was ready to jump in and do all that he possibly could for the advancement of hockey or any other line of sport, in Lindsay.

He referred to the question of a new rink and stated that he had made a proposition last spring regarding a new rink, which had been turned down. However, he was still ready to cooperate in any way possible in the erection of a new rink when that time came. He believed thoroughly in the organzation of a Town Hockey League.

F. A. Martin.

Mr. Fred A. Martin, manager of the rink, who has always been a keen supporter of hockey, stated that there was plenty of material for both junior and intermediate teams providing the intermediates could be switched to the western group with Uxbridge, Cannington and other teams. This would mean a more equal competition and more gates.

R. Butler.

Mr. R. Butler said that he favored a junior team but was not so sure that theer was material for an inter- that there was material for an intermediates were placed in the western group they would have a better chance of winning a district and he personally would do all that he could to arrange the grouping satisfactorily should he be placed on the Executive of the O.H.A. again this year.

BEATS POP GEERS' RECORD ON TRACK

Iowa Veteran at 84 Prepares For 65th Season in the Sulky, and "The Flapper" Is His Star Racer.

OSAGE, Ia., Dec. 6.—Old Pop Geers is gone. The Grand Old Man of the sulky was killed in action last summer. No longer will this splendid old figure grace the harness tracks of the country.

But another venerable has come to light to take his place, one John Kathan, who at the age of 84 is looking forward to his sixty-fifth year on the tracks.

In the matter of age and connection with tracks John even surpasses the record of the departed Geers. Kathan was driving horses at county fairs in New York state in 1838.

Along came the Civil War and Kathan enlisted in the Union Army. He fought at Bull Run and the Wilderness. When the war ended he came to Iowa and drove a stage coach over the hills, from town to town.

Eventually the racing sport was restored and Kathan gave up his coach and went back to his first love. Last summer he drove 14 races and proved his skill by finishing a bang-up second in two of them.

"And if I'd had any kind of luck I would have won hands down," chuckles the veteran.

Kathan is training three young colts from which he expects great things next season. One of them he calls "The Flapper."

"I haven't any grudge against the young gals who bob their hair and paint their lips," admits old John. "Fact is, I rather like 'em."

So don't ask the reporter why old John named the best-looking colt of the three "The Flapper".

OTIS P. SAPP: Who on finding that his hot dog was mustarded on only one side returned the barking beast and demanded an equitable compensation.

CONNIE McGRAW: Who admitted that if it really took brains to manage a ball club he would be back in Peoria sewing warts on pickles.

JOHN L. LEATHERLUNGS: Who sat though an 11-inning game without once getting up and shouting "Attaboy!"

BAD EYE O'BRIEN: Who on being praised for calling a close one at the plate right pointed out that it is human to err.

GLADYS GUSH: Who by the exercise of tremendous restraint, refrained from screeching in a high soprano voice when a foul ball hit the screen in front of her box.

GLASS ARM JAKE: Who told reporters that the error made by shortstop on a bunt in the seventh inning had nothing to do with his losing a 28-to-2 game to the Phillies.

TYRUS GUMFOOT: Who, although thrown out at second by 17 kilometers, leaped to his feet and congratulated the umpire on his efficiency.

PROF. SOCRATES WISE EGG: Who has writen papers on everything from the 'Reconstruction of the Universe" to "Whats 'Wrong With Ford Fenders," but who refused to be interviewed on "The Passing of the Spit Ball."

BILL SQUIRES: Who saw every game the old Baltimore Orioles played, yet concedes that the game as she is gamed today ain't so worsen.

BUNTS AND BINGLES: Well-known sporting writer who did not blame it on the "breaks" when the Blue Sox, picked to win the pennant, finished last.

MONEY BAGS McGOOF: Who declined to put circus seats in center field for a Sunday game, believing the overflow crowd would interfere with his outfielders.

SPORTS OF ALL SORTS

A recent chess tourney in New York drew $13,508 in admissions.

Charley O'Connell of Cleveland is being groomed to replace Benny Leonard in Billy Gibson's fighting stable.

Al Brown, the Harlem flyweight, is taller than any fighter in the game with the exception of the full-fledged heavyweights.

The Chicago White Sox must plug up the weakness at short, if the club is to improve its position in the race next season.

Ty Cobb believes Heilmann's slump in hitting last season was due to pressing. He was trying too hard to repeat as the league's leading batsman.

Ira Thomas, a brainy catcher when with the Philadelphia Athletics, has failed to deliver as a minor league manager. He's turned scout.

SOLUTION TO YESTERDAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE.

GAMBLING AT CARDS

The mah jongg craze is beginning to wane. It still has millions of enthusiasts. And it will be popular for years. But cards are coming into their own again.

This runs true to history. Thousands upon thousands of gambling games have been invented. But invariably man goes back to "the greasy pasteboards."

When people play cards, they are handling a gambling device so many thousands of years old that the origin is lost in the mists of antiquity.

The very ancient Hindus had a game called "Chaturaji"—which, many experts believe, was the origin of playing cards. "Chaturaji" (the name of "four rajahs or kings") was really highly complicated chess.

Life to the ancients was a lottery. They symbolized this belief in the four divisions of cards—hearts for love out of which life is born, clubs for knowledge, diamonds for wealth, and the acorn or spade for death.

In the Middle Ages, card games took clearer shape. Hearts came to represent bravery. Spades represented swords. Diamonds signified shields. Clubs were symbolic of army provisions. It was a military age, and cards became games of war.

The four kings stood for the famous champions of long ago—David, Alexander, Julius Caesar and Charlemagne.

The four queens represented Argine, Pallas, Esther and Judith—who were, respectively, symbolic of majesty, wisdom, piety and fortitude. In some decks of cards, with a little imagination, you can discern these qualities in the facial expressions of the grotesque ladies.

The four knaves represented the gallant captains, Ogier, Launcelot, Lahire and Hector de Gallard.

But if you ask a Chinaman, he will tell you that his race invented cards thousands of years before these celebrated personages were born. To a Chinaman, cards represent the stars, the human virtues and, in their various combinations, about everything under the sun.

It's the oldest game, and it will be played when mah jongg and even baseball are gone and forgotten.

HAREM STORY TRAILS PASTOR TO NEW JOB

UPPER LEFT—REV. H. M. FERGUSON. LOWER RIGHT — MRS. FERGUSON. INSET ARE S CENES SUCH AS THE MINISTER'S ACCUSERS DESCRIBE.

By ROY J. GIBBONS.

CHICAGO, Dec. 6.—The ghost of his past has cost Rev. H. M. Ferguson another pulpit.

Officials of the Mennonite church have just learned how he was dragged through the streets of Cedar Rapids, Ia., by an angry mob three years ago.

So the self-styled "dethroner of vice" is out of a job again.

The evangelist was invited to Lincoln, Ill., several months ago to fill a vacant pulpit temporarily. But he overstayed his leave, the ruling elders say.

Fearing he was gaining too strong a foothold with the little country congregations between Lincoln and Bloomington, the elders set out on an investigation of their own.

A committee of three consisting of District Superintendent W. S. Shelly, Rev. J. H. King and Rev. William Weaver went to Cedar Rapids to learn what they could of Rev. Ferguson's work there. And they learned a plenty, they say.

His former followers there, according to the committee, charged that Ferguson had:

Maintained a regular harem in his "Bible" school.

Brought men, women and children from Ohio, Indiana, Nebraska, Missouri and Iowa to live in his colony.

Led them to strip themselves of all their possessions, transferring all of them to him.

Then invested the money, thus collected, in his own name.

Had immoral relations with the matrons in his dormitory.

Refused to pray for a dying child until its father had first given him $9,000.

Ferguson, at home here, denies the charges. His wife is loyal to him.

They declare the charges have been proven in court.

A. S. M. Hutchinson's Famed Novel "The Clean Heart" at the Royal Monday

The mere announcement that one of A. S. M. Hutchinson's novels has been filmed is always good news to the reading public. The Royal has secured one of the first showings in Canada of "The Clean Heart" which all the New York critics agree is one of the outstanding productions of the year. The cast includes Marguerite De La Motte, Percy Marmont, Otis Harlan and the well known names. The film is unique in that it's a story of every day folk and yet it is different.

While it deals with to-day, there's nothing of the drab or the common place about it. It's drama without a villain, romance without a breath of sex suggestion. It teaches a powerful lesson without preaching. It's sheer entertainment.

It has romance, comedy, suspense, thrills, human interest, marvelous scenic effects. It's live, pulsating, interest-compelling; logical, yet replete with unexpected situations. Above all, it's intensely human.

It is A. S. M. Hutchinson at his best; J. Stuart Blackton, the producer, at his best; Percy Marmont, Marguerite de la Motte and Otis Harlan at their superlative best. It's a tested and proved picture.

The admission prices will remain as usual.

POLA NEGRI COMING IN "FORBIDDEN PARADISE"

Pola Negri's latest production for "Paramount," "Forbidden Paradise," directed by Ernst Lubitsch who made "Passion," and "The Marriage Circle," and featuring Rod La Rocque, Adolphe Menjou and Pauline Starke in the principal supporting roles, opens on Monday at the Capitol Theatre.

The picture is an adaptation by Agnes Christine Johnston and Hans Kraly of the popular stage success, "The Czarina," by Lajos Biro and Menyhert Lengyel, and marks the first professional reunion of star and producer since those memoral post-war days in continental Europe.

"Forbidden Paradise" is one of the most colorful and dramatic films which that famous pair have yet produced. Adding to their experience, and their mastery of technique during the two years which have elapsed since they separated in Europe, both Pola and Lubitsch brought to the filming of "Forbidden Paradise" a strength and deftness unknown in their European days — Result: — Screen entertainment of the highest order.

In the story Pola is the queen of a small Balkan principality, a masterful and efficient sovereign, who meets the intrigues and deceits of court life with an iron hand. She is a creature of extraordinary beauty and magnetism and possessing a decided penchant for handsome young men. Rod La Rocque is a soldier in the army at the front. Menjou is the queen's chancellor, her faithful servant and a diplomat of the highest order. Miss Starke is first lady-in-waiting to the Czarina.

A revolution is on foot and La Rocque, as Alexei, warns the queen but the chancellor attempts to discredit him. The Czarina falls in love with Alexei. Anna (Miss Starke) is heartbroken. Alexei learns from his fellow officers that with the queen he is more or less of a plaything. He is filled with a loathing for the Czarina, and joins forces with the revolutionists. The uprising is quelled and Alexei is imprisoned.

How he is eventually freed and finds happiness with Anna constitutes one of the most interesting productions shown in Peterboro in many a long day.

MILTON SILLS AND NAZIMOVA COME TO CAPITOL WEDNESDAY AND THURSDAY.

Milton Mills, famed as the star of "The Sea Hawk," and Nazimova, come to the Capitol next Wednesday and Thursday, in "The Madonna of the Streets."

"WHEN A MAN'S A MAN," FAMOUS STORY OF THE FAR WEST, AT CAPITOL NEXT FRIDAY AND SATURDAY.

Harold Bell Wright's well-known novel, "When a Man's a Man," comes to the Capitol Theatre next Friday and Saturday. This story has been one of the best sellers for many years, and on the screen is reported to be even more tense and thrilling than when read on the printed page.

AT THE REGENT.

SCREEN VERSION OF SUCCESSFUL BOOK AND PLAY FINISHED.

William Fox Produces "The Man Who Came Back," Directed by Emmett Flynn.

Another adaptation from a book and a stage play which scored marked success in both forms, comes to the public this season in the William Fox screen version of "The Man Who Came Back," which opens a three-day run at the Regent Theatre Monday. John Fleming Wilson wrote the novel which became a best seller immediately. Jules Eckert Goodman made it into a play which won Broadway and then the whole country. Now, Edmund Gould ing has written a scenario from which Emmett Flynn has directed a picture which promises to duplicate the success of the book and stage versions.

The story concerns the blacksheep son of a wealthy New Yorker. The youngster burns up Broadway and when it becomes too hot for him, is sent to San Francisco by his father to work in a shipyard. In the Golden Gate City he is shanghaied and eventually lands in the Orient.

The fall and rise of Henry Potter, the reckless devil-may-care American, weaves itself into a narrative so romantic and full of action that it might have been originally written for the screen. Needless to say, he does rise. But not until he has experienced the sting of defeat and the degradation of the underdog. He also learns the extent of a woman's sacrifice. And in the end, Henry Potter turns out to be a first rater in the real sense of the phrase.

A DOUBLE DROWNING.

Eli Thion, one of the victims, had eleven of a family, ranging from one year to 18 years of age, and his companion, Charles Moulding, a shoemaker of Larder Lake, leaves five young children. No trace of the missing men has been found.

Sending Crossword Puzzles By Radio Now.

NEW YORK, December 6. — Just to further distract the puzzle-wracked brains of the American public, the London Daily News has sent by photo radiogram a cross-word puzzle direct from London.

The diagram only was transmitted by photo- radiogram on Friday while the numbers and synonyms came by regular radiogram. The solution of the English baffler will be transmitted on Monday night.

FABLES ON HEALTH

Whenever little Johnny became too talkative, Mr. Mann of Anytown would refer to him as "too mouthy."

However, Mr. Mann was a bit talkative himself.

So Johnny, like his father, came to associate the mouth with talking, and with nothing else.

Now, talking is not, and never was the primary function of the mouth.

Long before men conversed, they ate.

Food must tarry and be worked over before it starts on its journey to the stomach.

If the tongue were shown under a magnifying glass it would be found to have "taste buds," by which the various pleasant and unpleasant flavors are tested.

And there should be good, sound teeth for the proper mastication. Then enters saliva, which, when given a proper chance to act, brings important chemical changes. Thus the starch of bread is changed to a kind of sugar called maltose.

Food containing starch needs an abundant overflow of the salivary glands, and must remain in the mouth sufficiently long to give the saliva a chance to freely mingle with each portion of it.

The work of digesting food depends largely upon the preparation given by the mouth.

The moral is obvious: USE YOUR MOUTH FOR SOMETHING BESIDES TALKING.

Toronto Fans Have Impression That Tigers Will Clean Up This Year.

TORONTO, Dec. 6.— (Canadian Press).—Hamilton looks like superteam of professional hockey, even with mighty Canadiens going better than ever. At least that is the impression Toronto fans got last night when they saw the fleet, yellow and black machine mow St. Patrick's down at every turn and win by 10 to 3. It was an exhibition of Scientific hockey that has seldom been surpassed anywhere. The visitors set a terrific clip from start, and at the finish were travelling just as fast "Red" Green was scoring star of the game.

BOXERS SUSPENDED.

Five Charged With Appearing on Unlicensed Club's Card.

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(Canadian Press).—Five licensed boxers and their managers were suspended on Friday, pending a hearing by the State Athletic Commission. The hearing is the first step toward eliminating unlicensed boxing clubs from operating in violation of the state law.

The boxers were charged with appearing on the card of an unlicensed club, the Genesee Boxing Association in Utica, N.Y., Thursday night. The boxers are: Jimmy Downey, Ralph Monti, Harry Weber and Young Coogan, all of Syracuse, and Johnny ("Kid") Blair of Utica.

The commission on Friday communicated with the district attorney at Utica, and also the chief of police, asking them to investigate the activities of this outlaw club with the idea of bringing about a prosecution. Grey, and was effectively arranged with a background of Christmas evergreens, tall stands holding artificial pink cherry blossoms with the same pink blooms and blue shades on the lights.

TRUTH VERSUS ERROR.

The greatest issue that affects every human being is centred in the one unique personage, "Jesus." Jesus said, he was the living bread, which came down out of heaven; if any man would eat of this bread he would live forever. John 6:51. The symbolical words "eat" and "bread" are easily understood by comparison with the eating of bread that sustains life only for a limited time Jesus is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of all creation Col 1 :5 He said "He that seeth him seeth the Father." John 14:9. False teachers belittle the mighty Son of God, "the only begotten of the Father." 1 John 4:9. Psalm 2:7. He is the Saviour of the world. 1 John 4:14. He is the last Adam. 1 Cor. 15:45. Jesus comes not only to release all mankind from death, the penalty of sin, by the resurrection; but he was sent to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord (the time of the restitution of all things.) Luke 6:19. What Jesus has done and will do for our race it is impossible for anyone at present to tell you. A synopsis of what Jesus is and what he is to us is conveyed to us in his own words. "I am the way, the truth and the life."—M. T. Butcher. 1d134 7794

HIJACKERS RAID RARE WHISKIES

$800,000 Worth of Fine Liquor Taken Despite Steel Doors and and Soldiers.

INSIDE JOB?

CHICAGO, Dec. 6. — (Canadian Press).—A band of hi-jackers raided a $3,000,000 hoard of fine liquors in the United States army warehouse here and stole rare whiskeys and wines of an estimated value of $800,000 early last Sunday, according to Robert R. Levi, United States Marshal.

The robbery, discovered on Monday, was kept secret until last night when Federal agents questioned more than eighty soldiers and other Government employees, some of whom were supposed to guard the store.

Fifteen steel doors were cut away, and padlocks and bolts smashed by the raiders to give the impression, investigators said, that there had been no inside assistance.

Deputy Marshals maintain a week day business hour guard but were not on duty nights.

The headquarters department of the Army, to whom the warehouse belongs, was required to maintain a 24-hour watch of armed soldiers, however.

The opening ceremonies were in charge of the group from George Street Church, after which Mr. Reg. Cuffe gave a talk on "Badge Winning", which proved very helpful.

Your Income

Your income depends upon your output. Your output depends upon your health.

As long as you have a fifty per cent. efficient human machine you need not expect your employer to pay you for a hundred per cent. output.

Build your body up to perfect health and you will find that your mental power, your general efficiency and your daily output of work will rapidly grow greater and your income will increase.

Ninety per cent. of the plodders need only better health to put them into the progressive class. One of the most important steps towards attaining good health and greater efficiency is to be sure your spine is normal.

The spine is the line-shaft of the body. A strong, healthy and efficient body and a normal spine go together. Chiropractic Spinal Adjustments will aid in restoring your spine to normal alignment, and then by living in harmony with natural laws you can increase your earning power, and also feel the real joy of living.

DEMOCRAT GAIN SEEN IN GERMAN VOTING SUNDAY

First Returns Last Night Disclosed Swing to the Liberal Groups.

FOR THE REPUBLIC.

General Ludendorff's Nationalists Lose Heavily in Former Strongholds.

BERLIN, Dec. 8. — (Canadian Press).—Germany went to the polls Sunday to elect a Reichstag and a new Prussian Diet. The three Liberal parties— Socialists, Clericals and Democrats—led by Chancellor Marx have centered their efforts on the defence of the Republic, as opposed to the Nationalists, led by Admiral Von Tirpitz and Count Von Westarp; Stresemann's German People's party and the Fascist party under General Ludendorff.

A survey of scattering returns from more than 75 metropolitan and provincial election districts late last night credits the Socialists with heavy gains over the Communists. The Democrats are also liberally exceeding their vote of last May, while the German People's party appears to be absorbing the vote lost by the German Nationalists.

The future of Liberalism in Germany and the ability of Germany to keep unimpaired the continuity of her post-war economic recovery will be heavily influenced by the outcome of the voting for the new Reichstag and the Prussian Diet.

If the Prussian reactionaries, who are the traditional and irreconcilable foes of German Democracy, are decisively repulsed in their cherished ambition to acquire control of the Prussian Diet and the National electorate returns a Reichstag which will be definitely dominated by Socialists, Democrats and Clericals,Germany will be enabled to settle down to a concerted and co-ordinated attempt to work out her political, economical and Social salvation along the hard and fast rules laid down by the Dawes reparation plan.

While this plan has been formally accepted and has been in operation for three months, a government which failed to command a clear majority in parliament would constantly find itself at the mercy of growing oppositional elements, comprising not only the German Nationalists and Communists, but also the habitually uncertain German People's Party.

Social Democrats, 127 seats.
German Nationalists, 104.
Centrists (Clerical), 67.
German People's Party, 50.
Communists, 44.
German Democrats, 31.
Bavarian People's Party, 19.
Extreme Nationalists, 14.
Economic Party, 10.
Farmers' Party, 4.
Hanoverians, 4.
Other Parties, 8.

NOT WANTED BY STEPMOTHER

So Little Jimmie Was Put in Box Car and Deserted—His Father Remained With Wife.

JIMMIE MILLNER.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Dec. 8.—Three-year-old Jimmie Millner's stepmother did not want him.

She told her husband, Walker Millner of Colliersville,, Tenn., he had to choose between Jimmie and her. And Millner did.

He brought little Jimmie to Memphis and took him down to the railroad yards and put him in a box car. Switchmen found him there.

The father is in jail, charged with abandonment. Mrs. Millner was arrested, too, but released when it was found she could not be prosecuted under the Tennessee statutes.

"They can keep him in jail until he rots," she told deputy sheriffs who went after her. "But I'm not going to let that brat come back to my house.

"Why, just the other day the thing laid out on the wood pile and yelled all day long! I'm not going to be bothered with no such thing as that."

And Millner insists he is going back to her as soon as he "gets out of this."

Meanwhile little Jimmie has found a home in General Hospital. There he awaits adoption by some other family.

Officials at an orphanage remembered the child had been left with them for a while last summer. They recalled him easily by the fact he had only one eye. The other one was removed in an operation a year ago.

CEMENT RELATIONS OF TWO COUNTRIES

Austen Chamberlain Visits Italian Notables and Reaffirms Good Will.

ROME, Dec. 8. — (Canadian Press).—Austen Chamberlain, British Foreign Secretary, here to attend the sessions of the League Council, had a busy day yesterday.

He had a conversation with King Victor Emmanuel in the morning, which was of an exceedingly cordial character, followed by a Royal luncheon in his honor at the Quirinal.

For the second time Chamberlain conferred with Premier Mussolini at the Foreign Office, and the two statesmen discussed intimately questions particularly interesting to Britain and Italy.

The British Embassy issued a communique dealing with this conference, which lasted an hour and a half, the discussion being carried on in a spirit of warm friendship, and, says the communique, "the possibility was established of a common line of action, and the intention of closer collaboration, in accordance with the traditions of the two countries, was affirmed."

Mussolini, Tittoni and other members of the Italian Cabinet attended the banquet at the Embassy last night, given in honor of Chamberlain and the British and Italian delegations to the Council meeting.

THOUSAND AGITATORS ARRESTED ON SUNDAY

Communists Strike Back, Slaying Popular Police Officer—Many Deported.

(By A. L. Bradford, United Press Staff Correspondent).

PARIS, Dec. 8.—More than 1,000 foreign agitators have been arrested in a sweeping week-end drive against Communists—a move by the Herriot Government to suppress a possible uprising. Most of these arrested were released but sixty were taken over the frontier on Monday. Those expelled included forty-three Italians seven Belgians, six Poles, and one Serb, Swiss, Swede and German. It was not until this morning that these agitators were taken to the border.

The Communists struck back, murdering a popular Police Inspector named Faget in a Paris suburb, where he was on duty watching a "red" nest. L'Humanite, Communist organ is printing flaming editorials, denoucing the Government course in "house cleaning."

MINERS IMPRISONED BY FALLING EARTH MANY HURT AND ONE KILLED IN U.S. MINE

Twenty-one Men Temporarily Entombed by Succession of "Bumps" at 5,400 Foot Level of Springhill Mines —Released By Mates.

AMHERST, N.S., Dec. 8.—(Canadian Press).—Twenty-one men were entombed and one man killed in the number a slope at the Springhill Mines on Saturday afternoon following one of the worst "bumps" in the history of the mine. The earth tremors ocurred shortly after twelve o'clock. The heavy fall of earth that imprisoned the party of miners took place on the 5,400 foot level last of the Toppillar No. 4 incline. Four bumps in quick succession brought down the roof of the mine cutting off the miners who were working at this point and crushing John Sweeney beneath the debris. Volunteers immediately endeavoured to rescue the men but were driven from their task by another bad bump. After three more subsided the miners returned to their work and at half past three they cleared the way through the fall and affected the release of the imprisoned men, many of them being badly bruised by falling stone.

The body of John Sweeney was not recovered until late on Sunday morning. He was found buried in the bumps. Earth not only fell in No. 2 slope but on the surface as well and resembled an earthquake numerous bumps having occurred within the past two weeks and on three occasions men have been injured.

Dr. Grassett after appearing before Magistrate Gunton was relased on bail of $20,000. Will appear again before Magistrate Gunton next Saturday.

After stating that Sir James belonged to New Brunswick, the Sunday Express added that Miss Mona has the reputation of being "the most intelligent girl in English society, distinctly pretty, and a brilliant conversationalist, with the gift for epigram and delicate cynicism."

Sir James Dunn it is said, was created a baronet in 1921 for his services in obtaining a supply of nickel from Norway as well as Canada for Britain and her allies during the war.

KORETZ IS NOW ONLY A NUMBER

Reaches End of His Rainbow in Prison Cell—Hopes to Make Good.

AND RESTITUTION

JOLIET, Ill., Dec. 8.—In the same cell Nathan Leopold occupied when he first entered the state penitentiary here 3 months ago, Leo Koretz swindler and promoter of "priceless" stock deals, began his ten year term with the possibility of parolement at the end of eleven months. He is convict No. 9463.

"To Whom It May Concern."

"Try to have this printed, will you boys," he told newspaper men, "this is my message to whom it may concern. In the first place I'm going to prison willingly to make partial atonement for what I've done.

"I'm going willingly. I might have stayed in Halifax and fought extradition and, perhaps, successfully—but I came back to take my medicine.

'From the time I left Chicago until the present time my sole idea has been to make good. To somehow be able to make an honest living and pay back every penny I have taken. I went straight —absolutely straight —after I reached Halifax and I was trying to come back when I was arrested.

Explains Quick Surrender.

"I know you boys want to know why I submitted to my arrest and return so tamely. Here's why. I wanted to get quick commitment to Joilet because I realized that just paying money back to my victims would not be enough. Before I could face the world as a real man I came to realize that I must take my measure of punishment.

"Then, too, I came back out of respect for my family. I know that once in prison my name will drop out of the newspapers and I will be forgotten. As soon as I am forgotten my family may get some peace. I have refrained from talking about my family because I felt that people did not understand the suffering they were going through. I hope now that the public will forget me for the family's sake.

My doctors tell me that the sickness which I have is serious and that I may not survive "he mused. "Well if I do survive this, believe me.. I'm going to start making a clean living the first day I'm out and make thorough restitution."

Attorney Promises Aid.

"Remember, Leo, your sentence isn't so bad," said Connolly. "With a ten-year-sentence like yours you may get a chance to be paroled at the end of eleven months and you can count on my going to the parole board with your case as soon as it is legally possible."

"Sure," said Koretz "I know you will, old fellow, and you'll know how I appreciate it, too."

Cautioned Not To Jump Wall.

"So long Leo, You'll be out in eleven months, unless you get foolish and try to jump the prison wall," said one of the party. "You wouldn't do that, would you?"

"Well, don't be too sure about that," said the master swindler laughingly. "Stranger things than that have happened."

Then he whispered to the man next to him: "Well, this is the end of the rainbow—it's up to me to pay for chasing it now."

WOMAN DETECTIVE MARRIES RUM RUNNER SHE WAS HIRED TO WATCH

Secured Position As His Housekeeper And Then Surprised the Prohibition Agents—Broadcast Bed-Time Stories.

"AUNT VIVIEN" BROADCASTING.

BY C. A. CLAY

SEATTLE, Dec. 8.—Federal prohibition agents, after repeated unsuccessful attempts to nab Roy Olmsted, known hereabouts as the "king" of the rum runners of the west coast, finally decided to "shadow" him.

So they hired Elsie Caroline Parshe, an English girl, who had come down from Montreal and opened a beauty parlor under the name of Vivien Potter, to do their "under cover" work.

Elsie applied for a position as Olmsted's bookkeeper—and landed it. And after a time the agents came to her to obtain information she had gathered on the job.

But Elsie had none to impart.

"Why, I cannot testify against him," she calmy announced. "I am his wife!"

And that is why "Aunt Vivien's" Peter Rabbit, Bre'r Fox and wicked Mr. Wolf stories from radio station KFQX were briefer than usual one night.

For "Aunt Vivien," teller of bedtime stories, was Elsie Parshe, the girl detective who married Roy Olmsted, 'king" of rum runners.

The federal men broke into the home of Olmsted, former police lieutenant, while "Aunt Vivien" was in the midst of her nightly broadcasting. And the thrilling adventures of Peter Rabbit were "continued until tomorrow" while "Aunt Vivien" Olmsted and 16 others were attempting to arrange bail.

But the children in Seattle and for miles around never knew. "Aunt Vivien" was back on the job next night.

And she continues to broadcast on schedule.

But the grand jury is listening in now, too, only to a different kind of a story.

The full contents of the gun entered his body and limbs, being distributed from his forehead to his feet, fortunately none of the shot penetrated deep enough to touch a vital spot. He was rushed to the Kingston General Hospital where his wounds were dressed and his recovery is expected less gangerene sets in.

GERMAN KILLER OF BOYS TRIES TO SHIFT GUILT

Accuses Granz of Knowing All About His 27 Murders—Had to Tell Some One.

"TO DIE LIKE HERO"

Wishes to Make Last Speech by Radio So All Germany Could Hear Him.

HANOVER, Dec. 8.—A dramatic clash between Fritz Haarmann, the "human vampire," and his accomplice, Hans Granz, furnished the high spot in the second day of Haarmann's trial here for the murder of twenty-seven boys.

In the clash came the vampire's consistent attempt to save his accomplice from the headsman's axe.

Al through the day, as he smilingly admitted one after another of the twenty-seven murders, his plan to save Grauz seemed uppermost in his mind. As for himself he kept on insisting that he wants his head chopped off before Christmas, but regarding Granz, he said:

"Hans is too young to lose his head. I want to take our secrets with me quietly into my grave."

Mercy Vanishes.

But when Granz refused to admit that he had profited from Haarmann or that he had lived on the latters' money, Haarmann turned savagely on Granz and accused him of knowing about all the murders.

He positively accused Granz and a man named Witkowski of committing at least one of the murders themselves. Haarmann burst out:

"Granz knew. He knew of every case. I had to pour out my heart to someone. But he has repaid me badly. He did everything merely for the sake of the clothes of the victims."

Haarmann hardly remembers any of his victims by their names. Chiefly he indentifies them from their clothing. When the clothes of a victim are shown, Haarmann smirks and bows to the judge and the audience, makes a sort of cackling noise, then tells with seeming relish of how the crime was committed.

Wanted Woman Ejected.

In the midst of these recitals he burst out:

"There are too many women in the court room. I cannot tell everything with them present."

In cases where there is any doubt in his mind as to whether he killed their owners."

In several cases where he insisted he was not guilty he said:

"I could say yes, but I do not want to admit more murders than I actually did."

The courtroom was cleared once so Haarmann could unfold the details of how he killed his first victim... After luring the boys to his room he said he pounced on him, seeming to go into a sort of a trance.

To "Die Like a Hero."

He told Dr. Schackwitz, the alienist who has been watching him:

"I shall die like a German hero.. I want to make a little speech before they cut off my head. I want to get you to write the speech for me, doctor.'

He pretended to be grief stricken when he read a dispatch from Breslau telling about a headsman who had committed suicide. He sighed:

"Now there won't be anybody to chop my head off."

He told the court he would like to make his last statement in court through a radio microphone "so everybody in Germany can hear me."

BIG DOCKET FACES GENERAL SESSIONS

Two Criminal Charges and Seven Civil Suits Provide Full Bill of Fare.

Two criminal cases are set down for hearing at the General Sessions of the Peace that open tomorrow, both cases calling for jury trial. They are Rex v. Newell and Rex v. Mrs. Annie McIntosh, in which the accusations are of subornation of perjury. It is alleged that the accused persons counselled two witnesses, Miller and Haynes, to give false evidence in Newell's behalf in a case in which he was accused of seduction under promise of marriage. [illegible], will conduct the prosecution, and Gordon and O'Brien will appear for the accused. Seven civil cases of which four are to be heard before a jury, make up one of the biggest dockets that has faced the General Sessions for some time. The jury cases are:

Commercial Investment Company vs. W. J. Little of Lakefield, a claim for $519.95 against the defendant as acceptor of two bills of exchange. Hall and Hall, for the plaintiff and Peck Kerr and McElderry for the defendant.

Clarence Bacon, an infant by his next friend, Thomas H. Bacon and Walter T. Belleghem, a claim of $1,500 damages arising out of an automobile collision on Chemong road on July 5. Peck Kerr and McElderry for the plaintiff; Gordon and O'Brien for the defendant.

Steve Andres, and R. M. Glover, a claim for damages and amounts due on sales arising out of alleged illegal seizure by Samuel Pearson on behalf of the defendant. Wilfred F. Huycke for the plaintiff; Gordon and O'Brien for the defendant.

Grant Riley Hart and Rose Hart of Belmont township and Havelock respectively, a claim for $500 damages arising out of alleged unlawful seizure. Wilfrid F. Huycke for the plaintiff and Gordon and O'Brien for the defendant.

Non-Jury Cases.

Edmund Wand and James Bogue a claim for $953.16 for balance of contract price for goods ordered by the defendant from the plaintiff for which the plaintiff agreed to pay. Gordon and O'Brien for the plaintiff; R. R. Hall for the defendant.

J. M. Greene Music Co., and A. V. Clark, a claim for $578.47 upon a Bill of Exchange. Peck Kerr and McElderry, for the plaintiff and H. D. Graham of Trenton for the defendant.

Nicholas Renzetti v John T. O'Connell claiming 6113,70 damages and certain legal admissions regarding a lot at the corner of Smith and Reid streets. Gordon and O'Brien for the plaintiff; R. R. Hall for the defendant.

CHRISTMAS PARCELS FOR THE UNITED STATES.

Those who post parcels of merchandise for the United States should understand that these parcels are sent by the Canadian Post offices to a United States border customs office and not direct to the office named in the address. At this border customs office, the parcels are examined for customs duty. Owing to the immense volume of business at the Christmas period there is apt to be delay in the handling of the parcels, and the public are advised to post all Christmas parcels for the United States in exceptionally good time.

The United States authorities request that a Customs Declaration, form 91-B, be attached to all parcels of general merchandise, weighing over 4 ounces, prepaid at parcel post rates, posted in Canada addressed for delivery in the United States.

They further require that commercial invoices or statements of value be enclosed with books prepaid at printed matter rate, also in sealed parcels of merchandise prepaid at letter rate, posted in Canada addressed for delivery in the United States.

These customs declarations may be obtained at the Post Office when mailing parcels, or if more convenient, filled up at home and attached to the parcel before bringing same to the Post Office.

The parcel post rate for United States is 12c a pound with a limit of eleven pounds. Parcels may also be prepaid at one cent an ounce when it is found to be cheaper than the pound rate.

Parcels for the United States may be insured at the same rates as parcels mailed for Canada.

Insure your parcels—safety first.

CAMPBELLFORD AND DISTRICT

Fuse Blew Out in the Methodist Church—Social Events.

CAMPBELLFORD, Dec. 8.—The ladies of the Duchess of Clarence Lodge of Campbellford are planning to have a social evening once a month during the winter months. The first one will be given on Thursday evening, December 11, in their Lodge rooms. They are having a special programme. They are extending invitations to the members and friends of both lodges, and expect to have a most enjoyable evening.

Mr. Victor Hay has purchased Mr. S. Waller's house on Rear Street, and also his milk business. Mr. Waller has bought Mr. Hay's house. The exchange was made today.

Mr. V. Chaplin, butcher of Trent River, who comes to Campbellford twice a week, had the misfortune to give his thumb a very bad cut on Saturday. As he was cutting up some frozen pork the knife slipped and cut into the fleshy part of his thumb, going to the bone, causing a bad wound. He had it dressed, but was suffering severe pain from it.

Just after the service began in the Methodist Church on Sunday night, the fuse burned out and left the church in darkness. It took some little time to replace it. The congregation and choir were in the "song service" part, and all kept on singing familiar hymns until the lights came on again.

Miss Ada Arnold, who has been in the West for several months, returned home on Saturday and will spend some time with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Arnold, Kent Street.

Mr. G. W. Vandewater, of Toronto, is spending the week-end at the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Diamond, Front Street. Mrs. Vandewater and little son, who are visiting at her parents, will remain till after Christmas.

LOVE AT FIRST SIGHT FOR HENRY FORD

Home Loving and Unpretentious Is Mrs. Ford, Who, as "The Believer," Spurred Her Husband to Success After Romantic Meeting at "Barn Dance."

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 8.—It was "love at first sight" for Henry Ford!

There was something about little Clara Bryant, who lived on a farm near Redford, Mich., that attracted Henry.

And that attraction grew rapidly, and three years later the Bryant girl became Mrs. Henry Ford, destined to be the wife of one of the world's richest men, and herself probably the world's richest woman.

Thirty-nine years ago at a barn dance near Dearborn, Mich., Ford, then a tall, thin, gangling youth, espied a small pretty girl with expressive blue eyes and long chestnut-colored hair.

He obtained an introduction. They sat out two "square dances" to talk about his hobby—watch-making. She was sympathetic. He showed her a queer watch he had made. It had two sets of hands, recording both standard time and sun time.

Fired His Ambitions.

She was enthusiastic, forgetting entirely about the two dances. She fired his ambitions. She had faith in him, he knew. And he fell in love with her there and then. Ever since she has had faith in him.

"I knew only a few minutes after talking to her that she was the one for me," Ford said recently. "I was sure from the start. And it's always been that way with me since. She had faith. She was the believer. I never had a word of discouragement from her."

But Mrs. Ford didn't fall in love with Henry right off the bat. It was nearly a year later.

"He impressed me very much as he didn't talk about the useless things which young men usually talk about," she says in telling of their courtship. "But I didn't fal lin love with him until about a year later. We waited two more years before marrying.

Says Henry Careless.

"I have always waited on his, and still do. He's a careless man. He's a clean man, but he's careless. He'll drop his collar and his clothes about anywhere, and I have to go picking up after him. I don't say anything about it.

"I don't scold because I know his mind is full of bigger things and he's not conscious of what he is doing.

She warns wives against a "greed for cleanliness," declaring such an attitude carried to extremes will drive husbands out to the friendly club, where he can drop ashes where he will.

The greatest hours of their romantic lives were the last 48 hours that her husband worked on his first automobile which was to carry them to fame and fortune. Forty-eight hours without sleep.

Watched Success.

The second night Mrs. Ford sat up until 2 a.m., when the little car was finished and ready for a try-out. It was raining and Mrs. Ford threw a cloak over her shoulders and followed Henry to the small shop near the house.

Ford rolled the car out into the alley and started it. It ran only a short distance. But it ran! One of the foothills of the mountain of success had been topped.

But there were other hills to climb. When Ford drove his odd-looking contrivance, horses balked, drivers swore. Jeering crowds gathered.

The populace called him "crazy" and "half cracked." But through it all Mrs. Ford stood by him—urging him on with her confidence. She was about the only person who had the "nerve" to endure the hoots of the crowd and ride through Detroit streets with him in his "horseless carriage."

Home-Loving Woman

Home-loving and thoroughly unpretentious is this tremendously rich woman.

Despite her millions, she dresses like any middle class woman. She care nothing for jewels. In dresses the shades she likes are brown and blue. Mink and sable are her favorite furs.

Mrs. Ford believes that good cooking is the biggest part of a woman's job. That's her forte. Indeed she refused to have any servants around her house until a few years ago. She's proudest of her apple pie. She calls it "bird's-nest pie."

"It's quite simple to make," she says.

And Henry likes it.

OTTAWA, Dec. — (Canadian Press).—Struck in the neck by flying glass from the wind shield of her automobile in collision with another automobile, Catherine Baxter, 21 years old, of North Gower, died within ten minutes, on Saturday afternoon. Her throat was gashed by a five inch wound which severed the jugular vein.

HOUSE DESTROYED

A fire of unknown origin started on Saturday night about seven o'clock at the home of Miss Bridget O'Malley who resides alone about a mile south of the Cobourg Road. Miss O'Malley states that she noticed smoke in the house and called on the nearest neighbour for help. When the help arrived and the door of the house was opened it caused a draught to go through which quickly spread the flames so that in a short tim everything was totally destroyed.

The loss is partially covered with insurance.

DIED A MISER.

Lived in Poverty Stricken House and Was Worth Over $40000.

TORONTO, Dec. 8.—(Canadian Press).—In a house lighted only by tallow candles and with poverty everywhere in evidence, Alexander McKenzie, aged 67 years, who had three bank books on person showing cash balance to the credit $41,000 was found dead last evening. McKenzie, who had a grocery business in Toronto some years ago was also owner of several houses. When the body reached the morgue, for the purpose of having a post-mortem examination performed, remains were apparently those of a man who had been in want for some time.

McKenzie was found dead lying on a couch in the kitchen of the dwelling where he lived with his sister.

Police officers used their electric torches to guide chief coroner to kitchen, in order that an investigation might be made before the body was removed.

RAPS WOMEN'S CLUBS.

Would Make Saloon Keeper Dizzy, Says Sir Ian Hamilton.

LONDON, Dec. 8. — Women's clubs came in for sharp criticism from General Sir Ian Hamilton as he opened a new club for former service men. He laughed, too, at the dreary dullness of many clubs of great social eminence and went on:

"There are women's clubs, too, perched up on the same exclusive eminence. Yet, I must confess that there is a certain atmosphere of cocktails, scented cigarette smoke and bridge, which is warranted to make a saloon keeper grow dizzy. Other clubs again are resorts of the gay and eager typist or the strict private secretary who met there with bustling country cousins. Those are jolly places, clean, bright and wholesome, humming with energy and life. But in no women's clubs is comfort up to the mark or food or drink or attendance. Some men say women are too mean to spend the money. Not so. The whole thing has for centuries been one gigantic piece of bluff, playing up to that 'feed the brute' treaty, which is their plan for rounding us up."

BURGLAR IN HASTINGS.

Entered Home of Mr. D. Beamish and Stole Sum of Money.

While Mr. and Mrs. Don Beamish were away from their home which is about a mile and a half out of Hastings an unknown party walked into their home. A boy about 15 years of age was upstairs in bed and hearing a noise downstairs came down. On finding a man present he asked what was wanted and instantly received a blow on the nose which stunned him for a few minutes, during which time the burglar had secured five dollars from Mrs. Beonish puse where it was placed in the dresser drawer of the bedroom.

Nothing else was taken and the culprit escaped and as yet no trace of him has been found.

DOUBLE DROWNING.

Two Employees of Lumber Camp Lose Their Lives on Pigeon Lake.

LINDSAY, Dec. 8.—A sad double drowning occurred at Bobcaygeon on Sunday night, when two men, Charles Young, of Bobcaygeon, and Roy Savinac, of Gooderham, employed in the Carew Lumber Co. camp, on the shores of Pigeon Lake, went to their death. Seven men left the camp Saturday night and crossed the lake to Little Bob, two and a half miles distant. They were making the return trip on the ice Sunday night, when three of them broke through the soft ice. One man was rescued, but the other two never rose again. The County Crown Attorney at Peterboro was notified of the tragedy, and searching parties are now busy grappling for the bodies.

PERHAPS MUCH BETTER.

Cross-eyed ambition, short-sighted service, bottle-eyed blindness is best exemplified by the individual who insists on doing all the little and unimportant details.

The bigger you are, the fewer little things you will look after. If you would accumulate something in business big enough to divide, multiply yourself by dividing your responsibilities with those who can do certain things as well as you, perhaps much better.

A POPULAR FROCK.

This golden brown charmeause frock is made over a chiffon underdress which has panel and sleeves of lace. Bands of soft flying squirrel form the collar and band the panel. This combination of silk, lace and fur is one that is growing in popularity.

BRINGS HOPE.

Professor Holger Moellgaard head of the Department of Physiology, State Veterinary School, Copenhagen, has announced he has produced a compound that kills the tuberculosis germ. American physicians expect great things from it. A supply of the compound is on its way to America for tests by the U.S. Health Service.

FABLES ON HEALTH

"Stop that racket!"

How many mothers shout this at the children who go about the house singing?

It may be that the songs seem like racket to a tired mother but it would be far better to tolerate the singing than be bothered later by sulky, unhappy children.

There is nothing better for the stimulation of the child's state of mind than singing or humming a tune. No tune-humming child is likely to be unhappy or brooding. It would be well for parents to do everything in their power to encourage the children to sing, if for no other reason than to instill in their minds an appreciation of music.

But, beyond that, there is actual healthful lung exercise to be had and the type of breathing engaged in by the youthful singer is excellent for lung development.

So teach your children songs and encourage them to sing tunes, to make up their own tunes and thus stimulate their musical imaginations. Music will always be a mental comfort in later years.

Steady economies in small amounts make possible the purchase of a coveted luxury. Read the advertisements every day before you shop.

THE SHORT COURSE.

First Week of Hastings' Course Ended in Social Hour.

HASTINGS, December 8. — The first week of the Short Course ended on Friday afternoon in a social way. Lunch was served, which was prepared by the instructors and the help of the girls of the class.

During the afternoon several reels of moving pictures were shown; one being the construction of part of the Welland Canal, one the "Life of the Average Ontario Farm Help," and some of the screen's famous comedians, such as Charlie Chaplin in "The Count." It was decided that a debate be a part of next Friday afternoon's literary programme. Several songs and rounds were sung in unison which added a joyous spirit.

The work that the girls have been taking this week has been under the direction of Miss Helen Habkirk of Toronto. The study was on anatomy and physiology of the human body, first aid instruction to the injured, practice demonstration in bandiging and the application of splints; stopping of hemorrhages, pulse counting and different character of rhythm and pulse.

The boys classes have been under the direction of Mr. Edwin Newsome of Weston and the subject taken up was Farm Mechanics, which included farm water supply and sewage disposal, the care and use of tools on the farm and in the workshop, various kinds and styles of pumps, various kinds of wells, how to secure a good water supply, from springs, streams and deep water courses.

A fresh water pump run by electricity is in the class room showing the water forces.

One interesting subject taken up was a sewage disposal system, with illustrations, showing how a septic tank and sewage disposal system may be installed. Many other farm and rural labor saving devices were taught the students which were made very interesting by the simple explanations given by the instructor, Mr. Newsome.
